The accused had a hearing, and, not giving a satisfactory account as to the possession of the wol, was committed, to await further developments. Some time after this two men, named Charles Bender and Charles Schot, were arrested, at the instance of Mr. B. T. These two men were employed on board the steam propeller Mars, lying in the Delaware at Chestaut street wharf. It seems that Messre, Benjamin, Bullock, & Co., extensive wool dealers, on Front street, had shipped thirty-six bales of the fleery material on the propeller Mars, bound for New York: One of the firm proceeded to the Union-street station-house, and there identified the property found in the possession of Haydh, as stated.
