The Army of the Potomac.
Our dispatches from the Army of the Potomac, this morning, will read with satisfaction, for they disclose complete information of its position and condition. General MEADE has shaved full rank from the Topographical Battalion, the movement being executed in complete order, without the loss of any stores, and without serious molestation from the enemy. On Wednesday morning General Lee attacked the 2d Corps, commanded by Gen. Warren, and his troops were repulsed with heavy losses, leaving a number of prisoners, colors, and five guns in our possession.

Tests of Victory.
There must be some general explanation of what has been so favorable in the war—the fruitless and barren character of our operations. These words are the plaudit of the Richmond Government, and a remarkable confession. Great and decisive victories, it justly says, transfer large territories from one belligerent to another, or give the victor some controlling position in the hands of the enemy? These are not the results of real victories, but are the exact results of the great Federal campaigns. Gen. Grant's success restored immense territory, and with it some controlling position in the hands of the Union Government, and a remarkable confession. Increased confidence will be felt in Gen. Meade by this news. His army is every day increasing in strength. His army is every day increasing in strength. His army is every day increasing in strength. His army is every day increasing in strength. His army is every day increasing in strength.

Our Loyal Members of Congress.
The members of the House of Representatives from this city, on the Union ticket, Hon. CHARLES O'NEILL, Hon. W. D. KELLEY, Hon. LEONARD MARRAS, and Hon. M. ROSS. These members of Congress are every day increasing in strength. They are every day increasing in strength. They are every day increasing in strength. They are every day increasing in strength. They are every day increasing in strength.

It must be clear to the capacity of even a Copperhead—notoriously the meanest intention of acknowledging the South as a separate and independent nation.
