The general desire to inspect this ship, and, when in the stream, her inaccessibility, cansed the Union Volunteer Refreshment Committee to procure permission from the United States Government to exhibit her, for the gratification of our cutizens, and for the benefit of their fund. She is now moored at the first wharf below Washington avenue, where the public are invited to call until further notice (Sundars excepted). A blorraphical sketch of this specimen of ship-building, including an account of her capture, can be procured at the ticket office.

(From the Atheneum.)

"Of Mr Merivale's merits as a historian we have expressed generally our opiation. The student will find in the present volume the scholarship, power, and impartiality which characterized the previous volumes. "Mr. Merivale has appreciated the depth of the Flavian reaction, and he has done instituted to the memory of those emperors who, unser its influence, made a last effort to check Rome's downward course. "From the London Spectator.]

"The ability with which Mr. Merivale's history has been written—his great research, his freedom from portionable, his vigorous narrative, his gental sense of character—are likely for a good while to keep English competitors out of the field which he has raversed."

"He is manifestly not a mere scholar, or rather he is not exclusively a book, map, but a keen observer of men and society sround him; for, while his Romans are neither modernized nor Anglicized, they are actual men, endowed with human passions, affections, and liabilities, and not the impassive abstractions which have so long usurped the Roman name in history."

"* "This History must always stand as a splendid monument of his learning, his candor, and his vigorous graep of intellect. Though he is in some respects inferior to Macanilay and Grote, he must attill be classed with them as one of the second great triumyirate of English Historiem."
