The literary editor of The Independent, after glancin the first twenty (?) pages of the book, throws it down The literary editor of The Independent, after glancing at the first twenty (?) pages of the book, throws it down, saying:

"Mr. Peter Bayne, the Scotch essayist and editor, and Prof. A. C. Kendrick, of Rochester, highly commend this novel, the former asserting that it is 'superior to Adam Bede.' These commendations are utterly incomprehensible. Prof. Kendrick and Mr. Bayne have committed themselves very awkwardly. The book, as a novel, is sunningly bad. It has no good quality except good intentions, which are not much in a novel."

And yet, in a recent letter, Dr. Kendrick says:

"I have again read Broken Columns since its publication, and I regard it as an abler and better book than when I fast recommended it."

The Troy Times says:

"One of the best novels of the day. It is characters are sharrly drawn, distinctly marked, and their paris are well sustained to the end. The moral taught by the story is that forgiveness, meror, and kindness will rise fallen women and sinfn men from the depths of misery and vice, and restore them to the ranks of the pure and the virtuous lican says:

"We have read it carefully, and pronounce it one of the best stories that has yet appea ed—intensely interesting, and elevating in its maral tone." The name of the author is not given; but wherever introduced it will meet with a large sale." HAVE YOU READ IT? PETER CARRADINE. PETER CARRADINE CHEERING.
