SEWING MACHINES.
LONG-LOOKED FOR
COME AT LAST!
THE PERFECTION OF SEWING MACHINES.
THE CELEBRATED REVERSABLE FEED
FLORENCE SEWING MACHINES,
No. 630 CHESTNUT STREET.
Where all persons interested in sewing machines are invited to call and examine this wonderful Machine.
It has been the object of the FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE COMPANY to supply a machine that shall have the objections attached to other first-class machines, and after the patient, untiring labor of years and a liberal expenditure of capital to secure the first mechanical talent, their efforts have been crowned with success and they now offer to the public the MOST PERFECT SEWING MACHINE IN THE WORLD. Among its many advantages over all other machines, may be mentioned—
1st. It makes four different stitches on one and the same machine, each being perfect and alike on both sides of the fabric.
2d. Changing from one kind of stitch to another, as well as the length of the stitch, can readily be done while the machine is in motion.
3d. Every stitch is perfect in itself, making the seam secure and uniform, combining elasticity, strength and beauty.
4th. It has the reversible feed motion, which enables the operator to run the work to either the right or left, or stop any part of the seam, or fasten the ends of seams without turning the fabric or stopping the machine.
5th. It is the most rapid sewer in the world, making two stitches to each revolution, and it has no other machine which will do so large a range of work as the FLORENCE.
6th. It does the heaviest or finest work with equal facility, without change of tension or breaking of thread.
7th. It hems, fells, binds, gathers, braids, quilts, and ruffles and sews on a ruffle at the same time.
8th. Its simplicity enables the most inexperienced to operate it. Its motions are all positive, and there are no springs to get out of order, and it is adapted to all kinds of cloth-work, from thick to thin, and is almost noiseless.
9th. The FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE is unequalled in beauty and style, and must be seen to be appreciated.
Call and see the FLORENCE, at No. 630 CHESTNUT Street. se1-3m

The Press.

VOL. 7—NO. 97. PHILADELPHIA, MONDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1863. THREE CENTS.

The Press.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1863.

ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

[Special Correspondence of The Press.]

CULPEPER, November 21, 1863.

IN CULPEPER.

It seems like a dream, that I should be in Culpeper. Only one month has elapsed since the hegira of our army. We left the town by night, in the red glow of fire light. Denizens on the doorsteps bade us farewell in vivacious tones. Last Monday our cavalry trotted through the town, complacently eyeing the deserted-looking mansions, not wondering at the chagrin of their occupants, who refrained from showing us the least countenance. I think a large number of families must have gone with the rebel army, as there is a greater number of vacant houses than usual. Our cavalry are encamped about three miles from town, the 6th Penna. doing provost duty here. Many of the stores have been broken into, I understand, and some two thousand dollars' worth of tobacco taken by the soldiers. A reconnoissance has been made to James City, on the right, and Mitchell's Station on the left.

THE FORDS OF THE RAPPAHANNOCK.

Fifteen prisoners were taken at the latter place, and the main body of the enemy found to be on the south side of the Rapidan, where preparations seem to be making to give us fight. Their position is a desirable one, but their strength is not very great. From United States ford to Barnett's ford, a distance of from twenty to thirty miles, the Rappahannock is full of sinuosities. Rapidan, Morton, Raccoon, Sommerville, and Germania fords, are nearly all located in places where the river bends, and are connected the one with the other by a succession of parallel roads, which gives to the enemy a very great advantage. They are enabled to reinforce any one point at a moment's notice. Unless we could cross simultaneously at a number of these fords, or with lightning-like rapidity at one, it would be a desperate undertaking to go over under range of their guns. A pause at any one of these places would be fatal, as they can easily reinforce from the right and left. Lee's army has less effective men now than ever. Whether we shall march on or not will soon be made manifest.

GEN. LEE'S DISAPPOINTMENTS.

Not a single movement of the past four weeks can General Lee reflect on with pride or satisfaction. His race for the heights of Centreville was futile, and he must thank the leniency of the people that he was not severely censured, as was poor Hill, who seems to have fallen under the particular displeasure of every one because of his slowness. It provokes them to think of the train and chances lost—they sigh for General Jackson, and exclaim: "'Twas not thus he was wont to march his men in such an exigency." Bristow gained for their arms no victory, no laurels for their leader; while their flight from that station to the Rappahannock was only exceeded in disgracefulness by their recent retreat from there to the Rapidan. Some time ago I noticed in a leading article of a Richmond newspaper that Meade would have given his eye-tooth to have had an opportunity of attacking Lee then and there. I opine General Lee would have given every tooth in his head freely had General Meade not assaulted his position at Rappahannock Station. Oh, the mortification of such surprise! The disgrace of that hasty midnight retreat his army made through the town on Sunday! Oh, for the warm winter quarters, almost if not altogether prepared, and alas! for the comfortable assurance given the good town people that the Yankees should no more come nigh to molest or make them afraid.

FLIGHT FROM GUERRILLAS—MOUNTAIN SCENERY.

In my "maunderings" through the country, as the Scotch say—for correspondents will wander in body as well as mind—I accidentally got on the outside of our lines. It was somewhere near Hazel River that I stopped. While conversing with the inmates of the house, I saw three guerillas ride up and capture two of our men. They said the remainder of the band, some forty in number, was concealed in the woods near by. I crept cautiously up stairs, and lay quietly concealed until they withdrew. My dreams were unpleasant that night, and I do not wonder, when I think on the experience of the ensuing day. The residence where I stopped was in full sight of the Sierra-shaped tops of the Blue Ridge. It was called Mountain View. From the front door of the house the misty-looking heights could be seen extending far into the illimitable expanse of ether. Here there shot up almost perpendicularly into the sky a mountain so steep, rugged, and bare, as to be inaccessible to mortal tread. Hill swelled boldly above hill; undulations shapely and unseemly were there; heights, smooth, graceful, and grotesque, were ranged carelessly side by side as if thrown together in playful sport by the hand of some powerful Anteus. Lower down, and leaning fondly on its base, rested a huge green mound, tapering off delicately and gently, almost imperceptibly emerging into the level ground beneath. To the right was a spacious tract of country with every species of little house and hillock, plain, and tree, and brush, to enliven its picturesque surface. Then came the long vista of the opening valley, dotted with the crumbling farm-houses, souvenirs of a civil war.

Leading from the direction of the mountains, the Rixesville road, like a piece of crumpled yellow ribbon, ran irregularly on till it joined the dark line which must be the railroad, near Brandy station. The whole scene was lighted and warmed by a broad, bright, honest sun into whose glowing countenance the loftiest could not gaze unwinking. The sun-worshipper Scott thought that additional effect would be given to his scenic descriptions, by the introduction of one or two human beings. Lesser lights have taken the hint, and we never read of a narrow defile through the mountains, but we soon stumble upon a "solitary horseman." When I looked out upon the quiet scene so nobly portrayed, I saw about six horsemen ride slowly into view. What little prescience I had was of danger. Steadily they pursued their way along the winding road. At last I saw them and fled up stairs. Their outré appearance, the mysterious manner of their coming, all confirmed my belief that they were not good men, loyal and true to their country.

STAND, AND SURRENDER.

Brief was their halt, yet sufficiently long to inform the people of the house that they were "Yanks," and to lead my horse from the stable. If they are Union men I can soon get my horse, I thought. After this medley crowd I rushed, and, in a voice as mild as Virginia home-made coffee, said, "Gentlemen, I would like you to restore my horse;" and, without waiting for a response, I inquired of a young man dressed in blue, whom they called Hogan, if he belonged to the 6th New York. "No," he gruffly replied, "we're rebels." "Oh!" I mentally exclaimed, "if you are guerillas, I don't expect my horse," and was turning to go away, but they soon arrested me. At this moment a fierce-looking sergeant rode up, and demanded that "pistol I had concealed some place." Without any qualms of conscience, I staunchly denied all knowledge of such weapons. I soon learned that my subterfuge would be dangerous, for he quickly drew a revolver from his belt, and placed the cold muzzle against my tingling ears. Oh, the dirge-like click of that lock, the icy touch of the iron, the dangerous appearance of the long, shining barrel!

Every time the horse capered I listened intently for a premature explosion. I quietly refused to give any information, and endeavored to prepare myself, by a brief prayer, for martyrdom. Here was an occasion when courage was needed more than bravery, the first is of the mind, the latter pertains entirely to the blood. The impetuous, unthinking man is always brave when the blood is hot; but he seldom has courage to face the danger which menaces him in his calmer moods. Amid the excitement of the battle, when the hurtling lead falls thick and fast, and God's noblest work is mangled by the bursting shells; when the brazen strains of the bugle mingle strangely with the wild notes of fife and drum, and the sepulchral groans of the dying—then, carried away by excitement and enthusiasm, he would dash up to the blazing-throated cannon, and terrify death by his temerity. But in the still small hours of the night he fears to wander among the slain, and would fain shut his ears against the incoherent cries of the wounded. At the witching hour of midnight he whistles a stimulus to his sinking courage, if called upon to pass near a grave-yard. He can scarce refrain from looking askance and trembling at the wierd look of his own shadow.

A ROBBER'S DEN—DENOUEMENT.

My courage, which had thus far been up to the "sticking point," began to fail. I thought gloomily of my prospects in Libby Prison, sighed in anticipation of the forced marches it would require to reach that obnoxious place, and groaned in bitterness of spirit upon the unsavory morsels of mule meat, and the indigestable pea bread upon which I might soon expect to be regaled. It seems almost incredible, but true it is, I was sorry that I was a correspondent, and wanted to "be an angel." After being "double-quicked" through a thicket where were some very sharp thorns, I reached the main body of the band concealed in the thick woods. Such a sight—what a set! During the heat of religious persecution in Scotland, one might expect to see such creatures concealed in the forms and caves of their native Scotia, that they might avoid the pitiless swords of Clavehouse and his moss troopers. Were these creatures men or "brownies," Union soldiers, or guerillas? One glance at their scanty homespun, a quick look at the blind halters and improvised saddles, the restless look of the men, their long hair and shaggy beards, all combined to force from my lips the exclamation: "Surely these men are bandits." I hastily threw my note-book in the brush, my watch and pocket-book was following hard after, when Captain Kline, of Gen. Patrick's headquarters, rode up, and we exchanged boisterous greetings. Here my trouble ended. These nondescripts were our own brave fellows. They had just returned from a little brush with Moseby, and were just in time to serve me as an escort. They captured a notorious rebel scout, Dr. James Jones, who had important papers concealed about his person. The guerillas are carrying off all cattle, and it is said they have orders to lead all colts away who have reached the age of two years and upwards. This, I understand, is a precautionary measure to preserve them for the owners and keep them from falling into "Yankee hands." Some people are sufficiently heterodox to believe they would never more see their colts and cattle if they got over the Rapidan. I think this myself. Moseby still hangs upon our right. He works in between the cavalry and infantry, picking up stragglers and unarmed men. The lucrative portion of his trade is in capturing mules and contrabands. Some weeks he sent into Culpeper as high as fifteen negroes, for which he is paid munificently. This is the first time he has been known to operate in this portion of Virginia. We have men in our army who would take the contract of capturing this bandit. I have met such men, and know they would bring him in dead or alive. Rebel scouts came into town twice since I have been here. Night before last they terrified two officers' servants, by compelling them to answer various questions, the answers to which they carefully noted down. Lieut. English, with
