A Rebel View of Edward Everett's Get-

(From the Richmond Dispetch, November 23] Edward Evereti's oration at Grettysburg is what might have been expected of that unreal, meta-phorical, moonlight orator. It matters little to him what the facts are, so he has full scope for faney, imagination, and rhetoric. He is always at home when dealing with dead men, and never so happy as on funeral occasions. He delights to water the flowers of his faney with the blood of the brave, and his imagination runs riot when it can strike its roots into the mould of sepulchres. Hervey's "Ma-ditations among the Tombs" seem to be the model of his funeral eloquence. "A dainty plant is the ivy green, creeping over dead men's graves. I ivy green, creeping over dead men's graves, I ween." Everett would be glad to have a Gettyr.
