BY ORDER OF THE TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION.

It is at all times unpleasant for the workingman who "same his bread by the sweet of his brow," to appear before the public in a card, stating private grievances, for the laborer suffers so much at the hands of those whose "offers are filled with gold," that the tale too oft falls unheeded upon the many ears used to such appeals. But when the publisher of a public journal deseends from the high position which its supposed to pertint to journalism in the maleteenth century, to inflict injury upon those in his employ, by sophistical arguments, which those uninitiated in the mysteries of a prin ing office cannot understand, in self-defence, a statement from those who have suffered it deemed naall of which is respectfully submitted. ime, to de:6-c&tu2t pris ing office cannot understand, in salf-defence, a statement from those who have suffered is deemed nacesery.

In the "Ape" of this morning appears an editorial headed "A strike," from the pen of the senior editor of that paper, which attempts to throw the whole blame of the present disorganized state of that office upon the men employed in the composition room.

It starts out by stating that the public "will have observed the omission from our columns, for the past two weeks, of the Marine List," and assigns reasons for the omission that, on their face, are plausible, but throws the onice on the employee. It is of this injustice, more than aught else, that the men engaged in the office compiant. The editor, in his remarks, ignores the fact that the foreman of the office (who, in all woil-regulated offices, has executive as well as typographical supervision of the composing-room) stated that the "Marine List." which is the great hobby in this onslangiar upon the employees, should be set correctly. In fact, he ignores the rights of the foreman, and sets himself up as the sole judge of what is right and wrong in the matter, and passes judgment accordingly.

That the proprietors of a newspaper have rights no printer galeasas: but the compositor har rights, too, and "printer face that the hands in the "Ass office" submitted. That the proprietors of a newspaper have rights no printer galeasys; but the compositor has rights, too, and "Drinciple" is as dear to him as to those who publish a journal.

The fact that the hands in the "Age office" arbmitted; by sufferance, to a wrong, does not make the matter right; and if they permitted one man to have charge of a department for "nine months." which was a depivation to them of at least $3 neek; that is no reason why it should be perpetual.

There is a section of the by-laws of the Typographical Union (which Union governs all honorable printers), that reads thus:

"Section ?8. A majority of the hands on each newspaper shall regolate all matters in redation to departments, or any other fat matter."

By fat! matter is meant choics "copy;" and who can blame the hands in an office, having borne, by sufferance, for months, a wrong, in appealing to the lorsman, the the only one whom they recognize, for redress? An appeal of this was heeded, and the foreman, who he found exception taken by the proprietors, adduced every argument he could bring to bear upon the subject to convince them that the hands were right. But all upon deaf ears, and by the promptory ordered fall upon deaf ears, and by the promptory ordered fall upon deaf ears, and by the two proprietors, adduced the convince them that the hands were right. But all eating of the matter in question, the Dark March He foreman for the published. Had he at any time given orders to the foreman for the published without the matter in question, the Dark March He foreman for the published in the interest of the fact that his workmen had rights that were as dear to them as the "apple of their eye," sooner than yield which, they would suffer from the stable that could be inflicted in his journal; an illustration of which he capter which were not vicant. Putting the time that workmen were attending to their own acknowledgments), endesvoring to get hunds to fill structions which he composing room, the proprietors of the 4ge had been for one week face, i n self-defence?

A great wrong was attempted upon the hands in the 'Age Office," and they owed it to themselves and the summunity to demonstrate the fact that, though poor workingmen, they had rights, and knowing them, dare notices in the self-defence of the self Ily submitted.
