Victor Hugo entertained, at Hauteville house, the poor children who, for about two years, have been the constant recipients of his bounty. The party con-sisted of forty children and several of their parents, for the whole of whom M. Hugo provides a sub-stantial dinner once a fortaight, twenty being re-ceived each week. These children are entertained without any regard to their nationality or religion--English, French, Guernsey, and Irlah-Protestants and Catholicz-being equality welcome, poverty heing the only qualification required. The party assembled on Thur.day having been re-raided with a solid dinner and a desert of cake and wine, were taken into the billiard-room, where seve-ral visitors were assembled, and where, much to their delight, the children saw the table spread with a liberal supply of useful apparel, such as jackets, gowns, shirts, caps, bonnets, stockings, and aboes. These having been distributed among the children with a ten regard to their negotive wants, the be-perolent host, addressing himself to the assemblage, said he wished to explain the motives and objects that he had in view in giving a weekly meal to the poor children whom he had then the happiness of disense, such as scrotula, rickets, and impoveriah-ment of the poor were exposed, and which pro-unet a of the optime commences), to which the shildren sits a their opialon that these diseases were caused by the children heing almost totally given ground him. Owing to political events this report remained with-out effect, but it made a strong impression on his (if. Hugo's) mind, and he determined that when circumstances should permit, he would test the soundness of the theory propounded. He had there-fore, about two years sgo, commenced the humble little work of which the present meeting was a part. He had selected 40 young children from the most necessitous classes of Huernsey, and to these he had given, not once a month, but once a fortnight, a sound meal composed of fresh meat and a sirell glass of wine. And he had the satis-fastion of finding that his humble experiment had been undoubfedly successful. Many of his poor little children who had been suffering from one or the other of the diseases he had mean-tion of nearly the whole of them sentibly improved. itoned had heen cured, and the physical constitu-He wished it to be clearly understood that he as-sumed no merit for what he had done, for it was a part of his creed that it was the positive duty of the rish to care for the post-a duty impored allike by Christianity and common sense-and that the rish had no right to spend their superfluity on their own enjoyments when they saw their fel-low-beings suffering around them. He had, he repeated, called these poor children together with the wide of carrying out an important experiment, but he had also done it for the purpose of giving an example. He had the gratification of assist-ing forty children ; if twenty persons would do the same, 600 children would be eared for, and it was impossible to say what amount of good might thus be done for the population of the island. He repeated that he wihed it to be distinctly understood that he was doing, and sincerely trusted that he should not be suppected of any feeling of outentation. For the children themselves, he would teil them for any good they might recei
