MONDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1864. Adolphe Thiers.

One of the great men of France has reappeared in the political arena of that everto-be-convulsed country. THIERS, the historian, sent to the Corps Legislatif by the voices of one of the electoral districts of Paris, there made that remarkable speech, upon the Address, on Monday, January 11th, which we republished in this paper on Saturday. The general custom, in European legislatures, is for each House to send an Address to the Sovereign in response to the "Speech from the Throne," at the opening of the Session. Debates frequently take place upon questionable points in the Address-which document is merely an echo of the Speech, If any other Address were voted, it would be a vote of censure upon the Ministry, who are supposed to be responsible for the contents of the Speech; in France, it would be a vote of censure upon the Emperor himself, who writes his own State papers. The last time-before his recent manifes tation-that THIERS spoke in the French Legislature, was in the National Assembly in November, 1851. Louis Napoleon, then President, was disinclined to relinquish that office when his time would expire, in December, 1852-and the National Assembly was unwilling that he should retain itby re-election or any other means. THIERS spoke feebly on that occasion, for he was panic-struck, and in a private caucus of the eaders of the Opposition, gave his opinion that "the President should be elected for ten years. It will be a terrible day for Paris," he said, "when that is proposed; but I feel it is just and indispensable, and I am willing to agree to it." Notwithstanding this semiadhesion to Louis Napoleon, the coup d'état of December 2d did not spare THIERS, who was arrested with other parliamentary leaders, and finally found an asylum in Switzerland, after a short sofourn in Brussels and London. In time he was permitted to return to Paris, where he completed his "History of the Consulate and the Empire." his greatest work, devoted to the individual glorification of the First Napoleon. He was considered to have quitted politics, but at last year's elections he was brought forward, with some other publicists opposed to the present order of things in France, and placed by their votes in the Corps Legislatif. There, no doubt, he feels at home, for his previous public life was passed in the Chamber of Deputies and in the National Assembly. Who, that ever saw him in the Chamber, during Louis Philippe's reign, can forget the extraordinary appearance of that large-headed, small-statured man? At that time, when a member spoke, except in momentary explanations, he had to ascend a sort of pulpit, near the President of the Chamber, called the Tribune. You would us, at one stage of the perform. ance, that some noted person was ex-SATINETS, &c. | pected-members had to write down their intention to speak, and therefore every one knew when THIERS or GUIZOT, or any other notability would appear. You would see a stout pigmy start from his seat; slide along the floor; ascend the Tribune by a hop, skip, and jump; shake his unkempt locks; adjust the enormous spectacles, behind which his eyes had an unearthly appearance; give a tug or two at his stupendous shirt-collar, which momently threatened to cut off his huge ears, and then commence speaking in a shrill, discordant, unpleasant voice, sharp as John Randolph's, shrill as RICHARD LALOR SHIEL'S, but occasionally round and full as that of STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS. But, if the manner were bad, the matter was excellent. The pigmy grew upon you, despite of the owl-like barnacles and that guillotine of a shirt-collar. His figure seemed to expand. His voice gathered substance as he used it, and became wonderfully expressive. He drew you along with him, a willing captive chained to the triumphant chariot of his eloquence, and you fairly confessed, after he had alternately moved your tears and smiles, your sympathy and your indignation, that if this man were a Charlatan, as his enemies declared, it was as EDMUND BURKE and GEORGE CANNING, as PATRICE HENRY and DANIEL WEBSTER also had been held; though history speaks far differently of them. No one can seriously doubt that ADOLPHE THIERS is a great man. Like many great men, THIERS came from the ranks. His father was a working locksmith. The son received a free edu cation at one of the public schools established by the great Napoleon. He was intended for the military profession, but the downfall of NAPOLEON changed his career, and he studied law at the college of Aix, where his skill in composition won the prize in two successive years. He became a lawyer, without business, and moved to Paris, where he got connected with the newspaper press, devoting his spare time to the composition of the "History of the French Revolution." The first volume appeared in 1823, when its author was twentysix years old, and the twelfth and last was published in 1830. When CHARLES X. appointed Prince Polignac to the office of Foreign Minister, THIERS attacked the new Minister with equal vivacity and force. When the Revolution of 1830 soon followed, a crisis which the writings of THIERS had helped to create, he was already in high favor with the advanced Liberals—with LAFITTE, Beranger, Manuel, and Armand Car-RELL. He did not want a republic, as others did. He desired a revolution in France such as that of 1688 was in England, expelling a hated, incapable, and tyrannic dynasty, and establishing a constitutional monarchy. No doubt the Duke of Orleans was in his mind. The Revolution of the Three Days came, -when it ended, THIERS emerged from a barrel in a wine-cellar, in which he had been concealed during the tumult, and undertook the mission to Neuilly to invite Louis Philippe to accept the office of Citizen-King. He was immediately appointed to a post in the finance department, in which he showed so much ability that he was offered the office of finance department, in which he showed so minister of Finance in the Ministry which succeeded that of August, 1800. He watch and soon after hecame Under-Secretary of Slate in the Ministry of which Latertrue was head. He held this office from November, 1800, to March, 1831, and while he hed it was made a member of the Chamber of Deputes by the electors of Aix. Financial administration became his forts. As a parliamentary speaker, his early attempts were failures. His subject naturally dryides itself into the subject of the subject of the subject naturally dryides itself into the subject of the subjec

Mr. GLADSTONE have been overturning du- | well known, that a very large portion of the personal ring the last three years. His politics became exclusively Orleanist. It would seem as if his ruling thought was to live and die as the minister of Louis Philippe, and this did not help him with the liberals or the republicans. In 1834, the Soult Ministry was reconstructed, but, like the Vicar of Bray, M. THIERS clung to office. At last, in February, 1836, his full ambition was gratified. The Broglie Ministry broke up, and Louis Philippe placed THIERS at the head of the Government, as President of the Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs. A difference with the King, on Spanish affairs, obliged him to resign after he had been Premier about five months, but he again had that office in March, 1840, which he retained for five years. When relieved from this duty he commenced the "History of the Consulate and the Empire," very superior, in most essentials, to his "History of the French Revolution." -When the Revolution of 1848 broke out. M. Guizor, the rival of M. Thiers, was Prime Minister of France-an able, coldblooded doctrinaire, whom many hated and tew loved. Guizor was compelled to resign, and then M. THIERS was sent for. He declined forming a Ministry without the assistance of M. Odillon Barrot, who, after much opposition from Louis Philippe, was appointed Minister of the Interior. This meant an entire change in the principles upon which Guizor had ruled the realm. THIERS and BARROT, however, always deficient in moral as well as in physical courage, had determined not to resist the revolt of the people. by military force. Marshal Buggaud, who had successfully opposed it, gaining military occupation of the Hotel de Ville, the Pantheon, and all the barricades, without weakening the defences of the Palais Royal and the Tutleries, receiving an order, when thus successful, to close the combat and withdraw the troops. This was signed by THIERS and BAR-The stout old Marshal refused to obey it, unless countersigned by Louis Philippe, but the Duc de Nemours signed it, and thus the monarchy lost its last chance." A few hours later, THIERS felt that he could do nothing, and prayed the King to put Odillon Barrot in his place, which was done. That day, the King signed his abdication, and immediately fled to England, where he arrived, disguised as a bourgeois, under the familiar pseudo-name of John Smith. M. THIERS was nearly swept away with the Orleanism which he represented. After the Revolution of 1848, he sat in the Constituent and subsequently in the National Assembly. There he did nothing. Now, in the Corps Legislatif, he comes forward as an ultra-liberal and reformer. His talents may be admired, but his political honesty is distrusted. At the same time, his eloquent diatribe against the present Napoleonic system must give great offence, and may awaken some apprehension in the Im-M. THIERS tells France that five conditions are indispensable for the necessary liberty of a nation—namely, "individual liberty-by which he meant that no citizen should be liable to any arbitrary interference or measure on the part of the State. Liberty of the press-by which he did not mean impunity in case the press attacked the honor of citizens, or disturbed the public peace; electoral liberty-by which he did not mean that the Government should never interfere in the elections, but that it should abstain from forcing candidates on the electors; parliamentary liberty-by which he meant that the Legislature should be able to control the executive; and, last, but most important of these conditions, that public opinion, once clearly ascertained, should guide the acts of the Government." He did not actually declare, but adroitly implied, that France does not possess even one of these five necessary conditions—the inevitable conclusion which all who read and heard his words must draw being that France does not enjoy the necessary liberty which is her right. He added that France would accept all concessions which could give her necessary liberty, but that the time might come when Frenchmen would exact them. This threat is said to have at once annoyed and alarmed the Emperor Napoleon, and some recent reports from Europe intimate that another coup d'état was not unlikely-probably a withdrawal of the right of free discussion in the Legislature, or, at least, a total prohibition of newspaper reports of the debates.

Revision of the Revenue Laws. I.—ASSESSMENT.

To the Editor of The Press:
Sir: The question of a revision of the revenue laws of the State has been before the Legislature for several years. Commissioners were appointed to prepare a revenue code for the Commonwealth, who presented their report January 14, 1863; but it has not, and, in its present shape, I hope it will not has not, and, in its present snape, I hope it will not become a law.

Some action will be taken during the present session. The Governor urges it in his message, and the State Treasurer recommends it in his report. There is danger that, unless great consideration is used, inadequacy, incongruity, and injustice will characterize the new system, and revision will again be necessary. I do not expect to see a perfect code less into life, as Pallas sprans folly armed from the leap into life, as Pallas sprang fully armed from the brain of Jove, but, if the Legislature will take up the matter thoughtfully, and anxiously seek for light, their work may be so well done as to require little alteration hereafter.

As yet, very little congruity of opinion or similarity of plan appears on the part of those who have been obliged to consider the question.

The commissioners propose to increase the revenue by levying a tax of two per cent. upon the gross earnings of railroad companies, and by a further tax

The State Treasurer suggests a new and mere effective mode of collecting the tax upon bonds, and other forms of indebtedness of corporations. other forms of indebtedness of corporations.

The Governor proposes,
First. To impose a special tax upon such minin companies as control routes of transportation, and thus enjoy substantial monopolies.
Secondly. The collection, in a speedy and compulsory manner, of all sums due the State for unpatented lands. A temporary expedient.

Thirdly. The same legislation with respect to the collection of tax upon body of corporations as is collection of tax upon bonds of corporations as is recommended by the State Treasurer. Fourthly, A tax upon the gross receipts of all railroad and canal companies.

The Hon. Henry D. Moore, late State Treasurer, in his able report submitted January 7, 1863, recom-mends a change in the mode of assessment, so that property will not escape taxation; and unlike the commissioners, the present State Treasurer, and the Governor, he makes a powerful argument against burdening railroad and mining companies with an undue and unequal proportion of taxes.

There is considerable diversity of opinion, which will be reflected in the Legislature and embarrass its property in the State escapes laxation allogether, either through the neglect of assessors, or the failure of the owners to report it."

We may fairly presume, from these statements, that an efficient system of assessing property would increase the revenues of the State at least one third, without change in existing rates of taxation. It is not possible to blunder on in the old way much longer, and we turn hopefully to the new way lauded by the Commissioners, as being the only possible mode of attaining the desired end. Here disappointment awaits us. Their proposed aystem lacks a head. True, they provide for the appointment by the Governor, of a "Commissioner of Revenue," who is to furnish blanks, give instructions, &c., to assessors elected by the people; but he has neither the powers, duties, nor responsibilities, which should attach to such an office.

The Commissioners being prominent and able men, specially appointed for their work, and pretty well paid for it, were under the necessity of devis ing something original, otherwise they could not have overlooked the perfect system of assessing taxes under the United States internal revenue laws. I am certain that they could not have done better than to copy it as nearly as possible, making the few changes needed to accommodate it to a less extensive field of operations. I would make the Commissioner of Revenue the secutive head of a bureau of assessment, to be symmetrically organized in all its departments, in such way as to secure promptitude, entire vigilance, and perfect uniformity of action. I regard the internal revenue system adopted by the United States as the ultimate and perfect fruit of the widest and most diversified experience. I claim no originality here. My plan is an adaptation of what I conceive to be the best model. Its main features are as follows :

A commissioner of revenue, appointed by the Governor, and holding office for three years. A general assessor in each county, to be appointed by the commissioner of revenue, from candidate nominated by the county commissioners. An assistant assessor in each district of the county, An assistant assessor in each district of the county, appointed by the general assessor of the county. The general assessors to be responsible to the Commissioner of Revenue, the assistants to the general assessors, and removable at the pleasure of their immediate superior officer.

Each assistant assessor to be required to make a complete return on or before a certain day in each year, of all persons, offices, trades, occupations, &c., within his district, liable to be taxed, with proper

Each assistant assessor to furnish blanks to every taxable within his district, requiring a return under oath, specifically, and under proper classification, of oath, specifically, and under proper classification, of all property of whatever kind, real, personal, er mixed, liable to taxation, including capital and ac-crued profits of unincorporated companies, private bankers, brokers, &c. Merchants and all other dealers, manufacturers, &c., to make return of gross sales. Theatres, and other permanent places of amusement, to make return of gross receipts, &c. This part of the law may be so carefully drawn that nothing shall escape it. Neglect or refusal to make return should be punished, and the assessor, in every such case, or where he has reason to suspect evasion, should be empowered to correct the return, fixing his own estimate under the sanction of his oath of office, and subject to the approval or disapproval of the Board of Revision.

This should consist of the Associate Judges in each county, in conjunction with the general assessor, save that in Philadelphia, the duty might still be discharged by the City Commissioners, After the completion of the assessments the Board of Revision should meet to hear all complaints and remedy injustice, the assistant assessors, and parties with their proofs being before them.

All incorporated companies should make approprists returns, under oath, to the Commissioner of Revenue, who discharges toward them the duties now imposed upon the Auditor General, and other of taxation. This, in brief, is the machinery which I would employ in the assessment of taxes. Its superiority over the loose, inconsequent, voluntary method now in use must be evident at a glance. It secures oath by every taxable, and the power and duty of official revision, must bring to light the vast hidden riches of the Commonwealth, and the burden now horne by but a few will be distributed among all her hereafter how all may be taxed equally.
