THE CITY. CALAMITY IN THE SECOND WARD. Steam Boiler Explosion at Messrs. Merrick & Co.'s Foundry. Appalling Scenes and Incidents. LIST OF THE KILLED AND WOUNDED. Investigation by the Coroner. At quarter before nine o'clock yesterday mor a steam boiler, nearly new, exploded, with fatal effect, at the extensive foundry of Messra, S. V. Mereffect, at the extensive and avenue, between Fourth and Fith, Second ward. Of course the most phrenzied and extended excitement prevailed in the entire southern section of the city. The most improbable rumors were freely circulated, which simply added fuel to the excitement. The reporters of The added tues to the exercisement. The reporter Press were early upon the ground, and gathe the facts and incidents thereto, present the reating narrative: The boiler house was built of brick, located near the centre of the yard. It was surrounded by the various shops or departments incident to an extensive establishment for manufacturing purposes, and he only wonder is that so little damage was done to this property. The boiler that exploded was con. nested with an older one, both being under the same nested with the need for pumping the water into these boilers, was in front thereof. It was endemolished. The exploded boiler seemed to have broken into two or three pieces, one of them veighing many tons, being hurled to the eastward to the distance of thirty feet. Smaller portions, and the flues were whirled in every direction, with great velocity, scattering death and destruction in their course. The bricks of the building were thrown with great violence to the east, the west, north, and south, doing more of less damage. The boiler that connected with the exploded one, was forced about ten feet from its bed, and partly canted over. It is 9 feet high, 8 feet wide and 12 or 14 feet long, the same in size as the or that in a moment was torn to pieces. The smoke stack, about two feet in diameter and thirty five or forty feet long, weighing probably a ton, was pro-jected in a northwestern direction. In its descent it crushed the roof of the pattern shop, in the third story of the main building. There were sixteen men and boys at work in this shop. The smoke stack crushed to splinters one of the benches at which a and boys at work in this shop. The smoke stack crushed to splinters one of the benches at which a boy named James Marotzer was at work.

Amid this crash of material, of falling beams, or splinters, the lad found himself on the roof, and was so astomished at the unrevealed method of his elevation, that he called down to Mr. Richard Newsam, who was yet in the shop. "Say, Mr. Newsam," shouted the lad, "how in the — did I get up here, anyhow?" This little incident had the effect to restrict the dumt-founded, half inclined to be panic stricken operatives, to something like propriety, and they left their apartments. The boy deceeded on the smoke-stack to the floor of the shop, and then hastened down stars.

Under the appropriate head in our narrative will be found a list of the killed and wounded of this terrible disaster, that has shrouded many families in deep gloom. Some of the deaths were instantaneous, and though their mutilated bodies presented horritying spectacles, yet it is naturally consoling to know that the poor fellows did not suffer. One or two bodies seemed like moving masses of human pulp, but not a groan to indicate suffering arose from them. Others less, though severely woundsd, were taken away bleeding, and groaning, and dying. One of the killed was standing in conversation with a fellow-workman, named Morris Agan. In a moment he disappeared, and yet Mr. Agan escaped without a scratch. Another man, working at an anvil, hammering away, suddenly found himself grasping a window-frame, the cannot account for his wonderful escape. His hand was somewhat cut, and for a few moments it was hard for him to realize the fact that he was not at the anvil. The experience of this man, and the boy Marotzey, on the roof, is indicative, no doubt, of the feelings of many others who made very narrow escapes. One man was wheeling a harrow near the boiler house; he fell dead between the shafts of the barrow.

There were only one or two persons killed by being buried in the falling ruins. Quite a number were caught smid the falling wreek of shed buildings and roofs but they either extricated themselves, or were assisted by their fellow workmen. server, of were assisted by their lettow workings, were a number of employees. Upon this a terrific shower of brick, iron and other missiles, fell. The shed roof was crushed in, and this gave rise to a stunning report that forty people were killed beneath the rubbish. The fact is, that the interior of the shed or building was so well fidled with material, that the force of the follow fragments with the shed to be the following was so well fidled with material. We believe that none of the men here were seriously THE ALARM, EXCITEMENT, AND OTHER SCENES— OUTSIDE AND INSIDE. In a few minutes after the explosion, the Marion Hose bell sout ded an alarm of fire southeast. This brought out the various fire companies in the First cistrict, and they were speedily at the scene of destruction. When the facts became known the fire-Hose bell sout dec an alarm of fire southesse. This brought out the various fire companies in the First cistnict, and they were speedily at the scene of destruction. When the facts broame known, the firemen promptly repaired to the place wich their am bulal ces, to take away the dead and wounded. Foremost among the medical or surgical gentlemen, were Drs. William B. Atkinson, surgeon in the army, and Dr. Andrew Nobinger. Dr. atkinson had been attending a little boy, son of Mr. McLaughlin, the engineer who was killed. The doctor was in a railroad car, on his way up Fifth street. The explosion occurred just as the car reached the upper aide of Washington street. He sprag out and ran to the entrance of the foundry, feeling assured that he might render some professional assistance. He was recognized, caught hold of by Mr. Bastian, one of the workmen, who exclaimed, "Oh, Doctor, come in—come in!"

At this time the stesm was yet escaping, but it had lost its expansive power. The interior of the machine shop was yet filled with the dense warm fog. The doctor was conducted by Mr. Bastian, to near where the boiler house stood. There tay the coppe of Mr. McLoughin, his head parily shattered, and his brains running out. Near him was another workman strugging amid the wreck. His head was baldy injured. This man partly extricated himself, but iell, and would have perished there, but for the exertions of others, It is supposed this was a laboring man. named Bradly, a coal smasher. Not far distant lay Doughtey, dead upon his wheelbar low, and a few rook farther the unfortunate Mr. Nebb, with his skull dreadfully fractured by a piece of iron weighing ten or twelve pounds. A piece of service-pipe, four feet long, with a valve on one end, was whirled through the doorway of the machine shop, and over the heads of several persons. It fell harmless on the floor.

Some of the effects upon property on the outside were curious. The concusion incudent to the explosion caused the doorway of the machine shop, and over the heads of severa filled with atoms of glass, and the bedstead, a handsome black walnut one, was disfigured with many particles of the same.

House number 1116, adjoining the above, is occupiced by Officer Adams, of the police force. An iron valve, weighing eleven pounds, entered the thirdsfory window, shivered a bed-post, and, glanring across the bed, stuck fast in a plastered partition. A little child had just been lifted from the bed by its mother, who was passing through the decrway to go down stairs. The particles of glass were showered upon the bed.

The dwelling of Mr. John Jolley, house carpenter, 1136 South Fifth street, also received the most unwelcome visitor of all. This was the man-hole plate, as supposed. It weighed at least one hundred pounds. The dwelling recesses from the street line, there being a little garden spot in front, and is distant from the zpot where the boiler exploded about one hundred yards. Some idea may be formed of the force with which this piece of iron was hurled when we state that it struck the front wall of the dwelling of Mr. Jolley under the first-story window, and carried with it learly a wheelbarrow load of bricks into the parlor. The children were in an adjoining room at the time. Mrs. Joiley had a few moments before gone to a reignboring store. She was on the return home when the explosion took place,
house when it e de stunctive man-hole plate whizzed
by, within a few leet of her.

The Washington school-house, a recently-completed structure, easaped hijury. The front door occurred when it was forced in ward with such violence as to push the rabbit strips from the jambs.
A few panes of glass were broken. The scholars were more or less frightened, and so were the teachers, but no one appears to have received any serious injury. Little Miss Minton, daughter of one of the directors, had one of her legs slightly injured. serious injury. Little Miss Minton, daughter of one of the directors, had one of her legs slightly one of the directors, had one of her legs slightly. The houses on the south side of Federal street, extending from No. 422 to 430, came in for a share of peppering of mud and brickbats, but no serious damage resulted.

A panel of the fron fence of Jefferson Square, on fourth street, south of Washington, was broken; also, several bars. A pretty large piece of wall of the boiler-house was thrown to the eastward, resulting as stated. Several persons were walking slong Fourth street at the time, but none of them, so far as we could authentically learn, received any serious injury. The doors of one or two houses on Washington avenue and Fourth street were struck by flying bricks, and more or less injured.

As soon as it was reported that "Merrick's foundry had blews up, and all the workmen were lilled," the people came from every quarter. Mo thers, wives, and daughters, rushed like an impetution to treat towards the terrible scene. The human take poured out of the streets, lanes, courts, and alleys, and all flowing to one place, made a scene of incessribable commotion. It was well known by the parents of the children of the Washington school, that this building was near the foundry. Anxious mate nais, of course, without regard to propriety of diers, rushed there to save their children. But their worst fears were not at all realized, render whatever assistance was accessary to the off the narrative is the following list of the killed and Uarpenter street, above Seventh. Professor J. F. Frazer, of the University; Prof. Henry Motton, John Agnew, Esq., fire engine builder and machinist; Jonathan Chapman, Esq., an cld retired machinist; Coleman Sellers, E:q., of the firm of Wm. Sellers & Co., engineers, and Gavin H. Woodward.

The jury were empanelled at half past three o'clock yesterday afternoon, and then proceeded to the place of explosion, there to view the bodies of the deceased, in the following order as named:

John L. Webb, aged 34 years.

Daniel McLoughlin, aged 35 years.

Patrick Brannin, aged 37 years.

John McGowan, aged 38 years.

Edward Bannon, aged 47 years.

John Dougherty, aged 48 years.

After viewing the bodies, the jurors examined drawings of the boilers, then took another view at the scene of explosion, and then adjourned to meet at half past three o'clock this afternoon.

Several theories are entertained in regard to the explosion, but this part of the subject should be left to the consideration of the gentlemen who compose the jury. WILLIAM S. & ALFRED MARTIEN,

His young ladies and masters are delighted to exhibit their fine drill for the sacred object of the entertainment, and will be stimulated to their best efforts. It is hard to find a prettier sight than a crowd of ros children moving together through these dances of health, in the bright and becoming bloomer suits they wear. Dr. Jansen is assisted in the management of his pupils by a young lady graduate of Dr. Dlo Lewis 'Physical Academy, of whom we may be permitted to say that she presents, in her own movements and poses, the very best testimony to the value of the system she professes. Some amateurs of the heavier gymnastics and beautiful acrobatro feats, will also be in attendance, while selections from the most classical operas, such as Yoetot and Tannhäuser, will be performed by a fine orchestre of about forty wind instruments.
