SATURDAY, APRIL 23, '1864, POR THE TEROENTENARY OF LEBRATION OF SHARS PEARE'S BIRTHDAY, APRIL 23, 1864, BY MRS. GUSTAVUS REMAR.

Hail! Poet Laureate of the earth,
With genius of celestial birth—
Immortal Shakespare, hail
Through every age, in every clime,
Thy glowing thoughts, thy works sublime,
Forever shall prevail. II.

Hall ! Poet of the Soul! each thought
Of thine, by inspiration caught,
Seems choing still thy name;
For thee we chant enduring praise,
For thee we twine with greenest bays
The laurel wreath of fame! III. Thy works seem limes a living fair. So rich, so wonderful, so rare;
From out the world of dreams,
The inner world, where fanny dwells
Weaving her weird, maste spells,
Lake brilliant sunlight gleams.

Here Science, Nature, Truth, and Art,
To thee their wondrous gifts impart,
Thou chosen child of sopg!
Teacher! Historian! Oritic! Friend!
Philosopher! in thee all. blend
And all thy fame prolong, Great Sculptor 1 lo, ourselves, through thee, In life like imagery we see, Carved by a master hand, All human passions—Love, Grief, Fear, Sweet Patience, Pity, Mercy—here Before our vision stand,

We read, and lo ! before us rise Eilins and sprites from fairy skies, In robes of beauty bright; Upon thy characters we gaze, Lost in a wild, bewildering mare Of world, and delight. VII. Of every rank, and sex, and age,
The hero, lover, child, or rage,
The beggar and the king,
With equal truth are here defined,
The labor of thy giant mind,
Whose praise all nations sing. GROVER & BAKER MACHINES.

VI.

VIII. In truthful outline, vivid light,
Thy figures stand, in colors bright
As the blue vaut above;
With panner's art the cauvas socaks—
We mark the blush on beauty's checks
The blushful blush of love. IX.

See meroy's tear, in Portia's eye, Revengeful Shylock, standing by, His heartless bond to claim; Or Hamlet crozed, with fevered breath Mourning a stre's untimely death, A mother's guilt and shame, See Romeo's grief and dark despair, When, banished from his loving fair, The earth a desert seems; Fair Juliet! weeping for her love, Pining, as doth the mateless dove, Or wooing Lethe's dreams.

Great Casar! by his kinsmen slain;
Marc Antony, in grief and pain,
Weeping beside his bier;
Macketh! with guilty, blood stained hands,
(As Sanquo's ghost before him stands),
Trembling with pallid fear. XII. As guilty Cardinal Beaufort dies, Seegood King Henry lift his eyes In earnest, holy prayer, That Heaven would bid his terrors cease, Grant the departing spirit peace, The dying sinner spare! XIII.

XI. ·

- XIV. "Wrought he not well who painted the Could mortal skill depict for us A picture more sublime? Could e'en religious voice impart A lesson to the human heart More solemn, mere divine?

Great Shakspeare! to prolong thy praise—
We need no monument to raise
Of coally marble high;
Thy name shall live until the sun
Shall cease its daily course to run—
Thy fame shall never die. Bright Star of Possy! evermore
As wand'rers seek their native shore,
Shall the enlightened soul,
"For thoughts that breathe and words that burn"
To thee for inspiration turn,
As magnet to the pole. XVII.

And thou, my country! in thins hour Of darkest need, shalt own the power Of one whose endless fame. Is aiding een thy cause of right!
Lending its beams of living light.

The Colories the name! Thus ever doth the immortal soul
Of Genius every age control—
Shedding effulgent rays
Of heavenly light o'er all the earth,
Speaking its high, angelic birth,
And the Great Father's praise!

William Shakspeare. (APRIL 23, 1854.) She sat in Her Eternal House, The Sovereign Mother of Mankind; Before Her was the peopled World, The hollow Night behind! Below my feet the thunders break, Above my head the stars rejoice; But Man, although he babbles much Has never found a Voice! "Ten thousand years have come and gone, And not an hour of any day But he has dumbly looked to me The things he could not say! "It shall be so no more," She said, And then, revolving in Her mind, She thought: "I will create a child Shall speak for all his kind." It was the spring-time of the year, And lo! where Avon's waters flow, The Child, her darling, came on earth, Three hundred years ago. There was no portent in the sky, No cry, like Pan's, along the seas; Nor hovered round his baby mouth The swarm of classic bees! What other children were, he was, If more, 'twas not to mortal ken; The being likest to mankind Made him the Man of Men! They gossiped, after he was dead, An idle tale of stealing deer; One thinks he studied Law, and one Taught school—but naught is clear,

Save that he married, in his youth, A maid, his elder; went to Town; Wrote plays; made money; and at last Came back, and settled down, A prosperous man among his kin, In Stratford, where his bones repose And this—what can be less ?—is all The world of Shakspeare knows! It irks us that we know no more,
For where we love, we would know all:
What would be small in common men,
In great is never small. Their daily habits—how they looked— The color of their eyes and hair Their prayers, their oaths—the wine they drank— The clothes they used to wear— Trifles like these declare the men, And should survive them—usy, they must; We'll find them somewhere—if it needs, We'll rake among their dust! Not Shakspeare's! He hath left his curse On him disturbs it; let it rest— The sacredest that ever Death Laid in the earth's dark breast! Not to himself did he belong, Nor does his life belong to us; Enough, he was; give o'er the search If he were thus, or thus. Before he came, his like was not, Nor left he heirs to share his powers; The Mighty Mother sent him here, To be Her Voice—and ours!

To be Her Oracle to Man; To be what Man may be to Her; Between the Maker and the Made The beat Interpreter. The hearts of all men heat in his,
Alike in pleasure, and in pain;
And he contained their myriad minds—
Mapkind in Heart and Brain! Shakspeare! What Shapes are conjured up. By that one word! They come and go, More real, shadows though they be, Than many a man we know. Hamlet the Dane—unhappy Prince, Who most enjoys when suffering most: His soul is haunted by itself— There needs no other Ghost! The Thane whose murderous fancy sees.
The dagger painted in the air;
The guilty King who stands appalled,
When Banquo fills his chair!

Lear in the tempest, old and erazed— Or, sadder, watching for the breath Of dear Cordelia—dead The much abused, relentless Jew; Grave Prospero, in his magic Isle: And She who captived Authony— The Serpent of old Nile! Imperial Forms, heroic Souls,
Greek, Roman.—masters of the world :—
Kings, queens,—the soldier, scholar, priest,—
The courtier, sleek and curied ;— He knew and drew all ranks of men, And cid such life to them impart, They grow not old,—Immortal Types, The Lords of Life and Art! Their Sovereign, he, as She was his, The Awful Mother of the Race, Who, hid from all Her children's eyes, Unveiled to him Her face: Spake to him till Her Speech was known,
Through him till Man had learned it—then

FREE-AND-EASY ROYALTY.—When the Greek deputation in the spring of least year came to Copenhagen to invite the young Prince George of Criticaburg to ascept the crown of the Hellenes, the gentiemen composing the deputation were duly received by the King in audience. It was cold weather, and the sons of Attica, appearing with red noses and bluish checks, gave unmistakable signs of the influence of the northern climate. After their introduction, the King, struck by their frozenout appearance, said to them: "I suppose you feel very cold here?" The descendants of Militades and Epaminous could not deny that they did, however much else they might be pleased with the hospitable Copenhageners and the fair Danish dameels. "Ay, I thought so," resumed his Majesty. "But I suppose you wear no flannel jacketa?" The cream of the Hellenes could not say that they were provided with that useful garment. "Then," continued the monarch, "you must get yourselves some; it is absolutely necessary in this country. Look here," then such the flannel at Mr. So and So's, in the Ostergade; it one's so much an ell; go there to morrow and get it." Whether the Greeks followed the advice is not known to its, but we have been fold that they were highly pleased with this sort of faultiar conversation, favorably confrasting it with the stiff and mo nosyllableal way of expression of their departed Otho.—New Monthly Magazine.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL. THE MONEY MARKET.

PHILADELPHIA, April 22, 1864.
There was considerable movement in gold to-day, at figures ranging from 173 to 176, with an advancing tendency. Exciting rumors concerning the armies in Virgiria, and fears that Gen. Lee Will again invade fear ylvania, were very plenty, and added to the number sylvania, were very process, and easier, although the rate is still 7 B cent. There is a feeling of more confidence, and parties who trembled yesterday were looking much brighter to day. Government securities were very firm, and the demand quite active.

Stocks are still unsettled. Much cash stock is still Stocks are still unettied. Much cash stock is still offered, and buyers receive all they require at about yesterday's figures. There was more loquiry for oil stocks, and a special demand for Irwin, which before the well was choked up sold at 10, and to day up to 9, showing that the prospects of the company are still good. Reading sheres fluctuated between 63% 669%; 73 was bid fix Pennsylvania. Philadelphia and Erie sold at 24%; Morth Pennsylvania at 34%; Little schuylkill at 47%; Huntingdon and Broad Top rose to 30. Exchange is heavy at 191@192. Bankers draw for gold dull at 173% heavy at 191@192. Bankers draw for gold at 111%.

The loan market continues to work more easily, An increasing amount of capital is finding its way into the city in quest of temporary employment, and for the purchase of approved securities.

The public confidence is returning, and the banks are regarded as strong enough to meet any probable extragency of the immediate future. We understand that to privent a repetition of the ruinous diseaser of the past week, the banks will keep a larger margin of legal tenders than has heretofore by some of them been deemed adequate.

The stock market has been more animated than at any time since the beginning of the late panic. Governments are strong. Registered 1891 are wanted at 113, and a large quantity of five twenty coupons sold readily at 110%@111. Certification of the late panic considered and the late of the late
