division was in the advance on the Spottsylvania road, from Todd's Tavern, with Sheridan's cavalry, and had driven the enemy six miles, carrying two positions they had endeavored to hold.
On reaching a cross-road they made a stand behind a temporary breastwork of rails and trees, and were massed in strong force, the greater portion of hem being hid from view by a dense woods. them being hid from view by a dense woods.

An attempt was made by two brigades to carry the position, but failed, when General Robinson rode in front of his men and said, "The place must be ours," asking the men to follow him. They replied with loud cheers, and, falling into line, rushed to the attack in gallant style. A terrible fire of musketry met them in the face, and General Robin son being wounded, and scarcely able to keep his seat in the saddle, the column was forced to fall back, the whole affair costing us about 300 men, and the loss of the services of one of the ablest generals in the army. The Pennsylvania Reserves were afterwards led against the position, but met the same fate, and the attempt was abandoned for the night. Col. Locke, assistant adjutant general to General Warren, was severely wounded in the face, on Sunday, while riding along the line delivering orders.

One of the most repulsive spectacles presented by the late encounters was that of some bodies four partially consumed by fire, the men evidently having been burned to death. These fires were started by men who had been cooking or through carelessness, and the leaves and husks being very dry, the flames extended over acres. Of course the wounded left on the ground suffered the additional torture of death by fire. A number of wounded were on Monday still on the Wilderness battle-field. On Tuesday, Burnside began the attack on the left with great fury, and an encouraging degree of W GOTTY, U, Hand

Engraving of every description at short notice. BRILLIANT AFFAIR ON MONDAY NIGHT. WASHINGTON, May 11.—A despatch from the army, dated May 10th, 7 o'clock A. M., says: Last night, about 11 o'clock, the rebels in front of Warren's corps made an assault on a line of riflepits, hastily constructed. Our men gave them a volley and fell back, for the purpose of drawing them on to a second line. The ruse was successful and as the rebels advanced they were received by a destructive fire, which drove them back in disorder; but finding our men still retiring they followed up, and after a charge on the third line, the whole of our line gave them such a raking fire as almost to demolish them, and springing after them, charged was very heavy, while our own was light. We took a number of prisoners. THE WOUNDED. Washington, May 11.—I saw General Sedg-wick's body at the embalmer's this morning The shot entered under his left eye. He looks na-the street this morning. They speak in glowing terms of the valor of the Pennsylvania Reserves. This brave division is literally cut to pieces, and a large number of them have been gobbled up by the berts, and other Pennsylvanians are here to aid in succoring the wounded. Delegates from the Sani-tary and Christian Commissions are pouring in. Our loss is much greater than the accounts have vet stated. Over fifteen hundred of our wounded arrived here last evening. They are being comfortably cared for. Goy, Curtin has been to see some of them this morning. The Governor proceeds directly to the SIX DAYS CONTINUOUS FIGHTING. HEADQUARTERS, ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, May 10, 1864.—Six days of continuous marching and fighting have found us exhausted almost to the last exremity; but we are in as good spirits as tired and leepy men well can be. Our ranks are thinned, but what are left are as ready to resume our dan and trials as we were apxious to commence them : and notwithstanding the hardships we have endured, and the grief we are experiencing for the ioss of our brave comrades in arms, we are willing to suffer still more for the country of our birth and Yesterday we had a respite from the fearful ordeal of conflict. Early in the day we had orders to hold the position we had taken, but not to fight unless we were attacked. Occasionally, however, a report from a musket would be heard, and then the hellish whistle of a Minie ball above our heads; but there was none of that continuous rattle of small arms, or the booming of artillery, already so common-place, and our weary troops rested from their labors upon the ground which their valor had won. RATIONS.

If General Butler meets with no serious check he will capture or destroy Richmond. City Point is the weak spot of Richmond. It is but ten or twelve miles from Petersburg, with a railroad to the latter place, and the Appomattox, navigable for one hundred and fifty ton craft, running to the same point. Petersburg is twenty-two miles from Richmond, on the railroad that runs through Woldon, Raleigh, Columbia, Charleston to Savannah, which is the great artery of supply and communication of the Confederacy. We have gradually pushed the enemy toward Richmond, and have penetrated to the Ny river. which is about two miles to the northward of Spott sylvania Court House. The enemy are in force pon our front, Ewell holding the town and heights this side of the Court House. iding has been incessant all the forenoon. Not a moment of lull has existed since sunrise, and I should not be surprised if Lee was making towards the line of the Richmond and Fredericksburg Railroad, as the reports of the artillery seem to be further and further hourly to the eastward. GENERAL GRANT DURING THE BATTLE OF THE WILDERNESS. General Grant's headquarters were located in a field between the plank road and a small road leading to a little hamlet known as Parker's store. Dusting the control of the field between the plank road and a small road leading to a little hamlet known as Parker's store. During the fight, however, he was principally with General Meade, whose headquarters were on a piney knoll in the rear of Warren's corps. I kad seen Grant at Vicksburg and in Tennessee, and his appearance was familiar; but as I strolled through the group of officers reclaining under the trees at headquarters, I looked for him some time in vain, such was his insignificant, unpretending aspect and conduct, while the battle was raging in all its fury. A stranger to the insignia of military rank would have little dreamed that the plain, quiet man who sat with his back against a tree, apparently heedless and unmoved, was the one upon whom the fortunes of the day, if not of the age and country, were hinging. It was only when some aid or orderly rode up in hot haste with a communication from some portion of the battle-field that his eyes upturned to seek in those of the messenger the purport of the message.

The consultation with General Meade, or the direct suggestion or command, all took place with that same imperturbability of countenance for which he has always been remarkable. No movement of the enemy seemed to puzzle or disconcert him. Fertile in resources, the petition for reinforcement was speedily answered. And while all this transpired, he stood calmly in the group, at times smoking his favorite cigar—a more vigorous or a more frequent puffing only indicating the inward working of the mind. If something transpired which he deemed needed his personal attention, away he darted on horseback to the immediate scene, the one or two of his aids and an orderly exerting their utmost to keep up with him. Arrived on the spot, he calmly considered the matter requiring his attention, with ready judgment communicated the necessary orders, and then galloped away to another part of the field, or to his seat beneath the pine tree, there to enter on the order book some record of the battle's progress. on the order book some record of the battle's progress.

It was amusing at times to see him—the Commander-in-Chief—whittling away with his knife on the bark of a tree, pausing now and then to throw in a word or sentence in the conversation of those grouped about, and then going to work again with renewed vigor upon the incision of the pine. The contemplation of this by those who were with him at Vicksburg will recall an incident of a similar character in that memorable siege. When the columblads were mounted in front of Logan's line, Gen. Grant was desirous of superintending the operations. During the preliminary work of cutting the embrasures he mounted the epaulement, and, while the rebel builets struck all around him, decliberately whittled a rail until the guns were placed to-day:

"I announce with painful feelings the loss of Gen James S. Wadsworth in the recent battles on the Rapidan. He met death bravely at the head of the forces under his command. A leading and wealthy citizen, he exercised a wide influence by the vigor and energy of his character. As a public man he was always decided and resolute in domanding purity of legislation, and the economical and wise administration of the affairs of our own State. Long prominent among us in civil life, when the war larke out he was recomet and among the first to join prominent among us in civil life, when the war broke out he was prompt and among the first to join the army. From the outset an ardont supporter of the war, to him belongs the merit of freely perfling his own person in upholding the opinions which he advocated. Assigned at once to a high military position, he has been, up to the day of his death, actively and carnestly devoting himself to the performance of his military duties.

"As a mark of respect for his memory, the American flag will be displayed at half mast on the Capitol and upon all the arsenals of the State.

W J Bunnelly, Hi, arm pitals for us if we need them. It is a beautiful place. Our advance drove in the rebel pickets toplace. Our advance drove in the rebel pickets to-day. We are now about two and a half miles east of Ringgold. The 4th Corps is, I believe, massing on the left of the 14th Corps. All is still quiet with us. It is now 4 P. M. What to-morrow may de-velop, to-morrow alone can tell. May the rebels either fall back or surrender without the effusion of more blood. I hope the latter may be their course. It is not probable we will have a battle precipitated upon us to-night now. To-morrow, however, may e a terrible day, the last to many. "The last, the last, the last! Letter from General Butler CONCERNING LIQUOR LICENSES AND GOVERNOR PIERPONT'S PAMPHLET. The Norfolk New Regime publishes the following sharp letter from General Butler to an assessor in Norfolk, Va.: Norfolk, Va.:

"Headquarters 18th Army Corps,
Department of Va. and N. C., Forthers Monroe, May 4, 1864.

"Sir: I have received your note saying that you are assessing for State licenses for 1864, and turther that 'the regulation giving the privilege of bringing spirituous liquors into the city to a few persons only is giving dissatisfaction to many persons, and will reduce the number of licenses, and consequently the revenues from this source."

"You then further give me your opinion that restricting the sale of liquors to a few persons will not reduce the consumption, and that you think that all merchants of good standing should have the privilege, and that you are satisfied that I did not make the regulation in the interest of the few.

merchants of good standing should have the privilege, and that you are satisfied that I dld not make the regulation in the interest of the few.
"I have given licenses to twelve persons to sell liquor in Norfolk, they keeping accurate books to whom they sell, and they are held responsible for the purposes to which it goes, to the extent of their licenses. If the license is a valuable thing to thom, that makes a check upon their actions. I was informed before the order issued that the sot disent Governor of Virginia, Plerpoint, had complained that the non-granting of liquor licenses in Alexandria by General Slough had nearly bankruptedthe treasury of Virginia. I think a State which cannot exist without deriving its principal revenue from the unrestricted sale of potsonous fiquors to its inhabitants had better get itself out of existence.
"If my regulations in this regard should have that effect upon such a State as I have described, it would be a source of congratulation. Twelve (12) persons selling liquor at retail, and all respectable hotels selling it to their guests, would seem to be enough, in a city of ten thousand whites and five thousand blacks, to engender pauperism and crime, and prevent monopoly; and as you and I segree that the less sold the better, the more restriction thrown around the sale the less will be sold, is the universal law of trade.
"I have the personnal acquaintance, and prior to the granting of their licenses have never spoken to or seen but two of the twelve persons to whom this permit was given. After the twelve were filled up, one of my warmest and oldest personal friends in trade in Norfolk I was obliged to retuse, because I had fixed the number at twelve. Because of this I have been abused by the supposed Governor of the State of Virginia.

one of my warmest and oldest personal irlends in trade in Norfolk I was obliged to refuse, because I had fixed the number at twelve. Because of this I have been abused by the supposed Governor of the State of Virginia in a scurrilous pamphlet, which is the only aid I have received from him stinee taking charge of this department towards suppressing the rebellion or in governing a disarranged community. "I have done what I believe to be right in this regard, and neither the opinions of the assessor, for whom I entertain a high respect, nor the abuse of the Governor, will be very likely to move me from my position.

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant, BENJ. F. BUTLER, "Major General Commanding."
To John M. Dunn, Assessor Fourth district of Virginia, Norfolk, Va."

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL, THE MONEY MARKET.

PHILADELPHIA, May 11, 1864.
Extravagant rumors of disaster to our army in Virginia enabled the Wall-street speculators to run up the price of gold to 176½ very early this morning, and gave them the pretext for putting it up and down at their own option for the rest of the day, a privilege they did not fail to now and estudy a provided they did not fail to now and estudy are reconsistent. not fail to use and abuse very extensively. The consequence was a most delightful series of fluctuations, of which about the last was 172½.

Government securities weakened slightly, but closed firm; 106½ being freely paid for the five-twenties, 113½ bid for 1851s. Money was plenty, at accommodating rates. rates.
The stock market opened quite buoyantly, and prices were firm. Almost all classes advanced. Reading rose to 66%, closing about 1 lower. Pennsylvania sold at 95%; Little Schuylkill at 47%; Philadelphia and Eric at 33%; 32 was bid for North Pennsylvania. Hewes & Rahm, No. 52 South Third street, quote

HEADQUARTERS 15th REGIMENT O. V. V. I., Allow me to send you the following items of news from this Department of our army. Our situation, as a regiment, is in the 1st Brigade, 3d Division, 4th Army Corps, Department of the Cumborland, and Military Division of the Mississippi. Our brigade commander is Brigadier General Willick; our division commander is General Wood; the corps commander is General Howard; department commander, General Thomas; and General Sherman, comnander of the Military Division of the Mississippi. Our present locality is near McDonald's Station Tennessee, about twenty miles east of Chattanooga, Tenn., and about twenty-five miles north of Dalton, Ga. Yesterday we were ordered to send back all surplus baggage to Bridgeport, Ala. In the army we generally understand this to mean stripping for the fight, if the rebels are disposed to show fight.

Today we are ordered to move at noon; to what point I know not. We always move in the army by faith. The future alone will reveal certainly what our present destination is. I do not wish to write conjectures, hence I speak not of the future. What I do see and know I may write when it transpires; but whether we are going to move to-day towards Dalton, or Atlanta, or Mobile, or Richmond, or SECOND BOARD. Charleston, I do not know. In a few hours, I may be able to give you reliable information on this So far as this part of our army is concerned, it is in excellent health and excellent condition. The soldiers are anxious for a forward move. Our sol-AFTER BOARDS.

great artery of supply and communication of the Confederacy.

Taking Petersburg, General Butler will cut Lee's main reliance to continue battle, and can move over pretty good ground directly to Manchester, opposite Richmond, and the place would then be at his mercy. Or, making Petersburg by moving to the right, he could strike the railroad further north with the same result. Bermuda Hundred is the terminus of deep navigation on the James, and is three miles above City Point. Full sixteen feet of water can be found from the mouth of the James to Bermuda Hundred, giving ample navigation for the navy and transports. If any considerable body is moving up the Peninsula from West Point, Richmond may be almost considered as a captured place.

The market closed firm. Correspondents are mistaken in supposing that the railroad through Richmond is the only railroad connection Richmond has with the South. The railroad to and through Danville, Va., has recently been pushed to completion—and most probably just to provide against any interruption of the other route to Weldon or Petersburg—and now connects Richmond with the Southwest. Neither would the connection of Richmond with the Southwest be cut off entirely by the occupation of Gordonsville, since there is another road leading into that near Lynchburg.—Petersburg Express. ty warrants......ive-twenty bonds..... GEN. LEE'S OFFICIAL REPORT. HEADQUARTERS ARMY NORTHERN VIRGINIA, May 5, 1864. Hon. Secretary of War:

The enemy crossed the Rapidan at Ely's and Germanna Fords. Two corps of this army moved to oppose him—Ewell's by the old turnpike and Hill's by the plank-road. They arrived this morning in close proximity to the enemy's line of march. A strong attack was made upon Ewell, who repulsed it, capturing many prisoners and four pieces of artillery. The enemy subsequently concentrated upon Gen. Hill, who, with his and Wilcox's divisions, successfully resisted the repeated and desporate assaults. A large force of cavalry and artillery on our right were driven back by Rossan's brigade. By the blessing of God, we maintained position against every effort until night, when the combat closed. We have to mourn the loss of many brave officers and men. Gallant Brig. Gen. J. M. Jones was killed, and Gen. Stafford, I fear, mortally wounded, while leading his command with conspicuous valor. Gen. Stafford, 1 lear, moreover, ing his command with conspicuous valor.
R. E. LEE. ARE WE PREPARED?

[From the Richmond Whig, May 8.]

Suppose the battle between Lee and Grant is indecisive, or suppose the enemy gain such advantages as to compel Lee to fall back toward Richmond, are we at all prepared for such a contingency? Candor compels a negative answer, for we have been so elated by success after success that we have not permitted ourselves to contemplate the probability of anything but victory. This is not wise. The reaction from the elated condition in which we have been for months past may carry us to the other extreme, and at a time when the highest qualities of manhood may be needed to repair a temporary reverse, we will be found in a state of supine despendency. We should at once look on the other side of the picture, and accustom ourselves to the idea of a temporary miscarriage of our arms, and to the requirement of such an event. While the auspices were never more favorable for Lee, the chances of battle are so various, and so much beyond human control; that it is impossible to foretell with certainty the issue of the pending engagement. A year ago "Stonewall" Jackson fell not far from the spot on which Lee and Grant are about to join battle. What if Lee should fall? May Providence spare us this calamity, for the people of the Confederacy are by no means prepared for it.

We all know this, yet no one has asked the question: What are we to do if Lee suffers a reverse, and is forced to fall back upon this city?

DEMOPOLIS, May 5.—Information from Mississippi states that Gen. Emery, with 10,000 infantry, two batteries of artillery, and 250 cavalry, all under Gen. McArthur, were advancing toward Yazoo City, and oncamped the night before last eight miles below Mechanicsburg.

The Virginian has information that Averill has concentrated eight thousand cavalry and infantry in the Kanawha Valley, with the intention of making a raid on the sait works in Washington county.
