MOLDED COLLARS

Have now been before the public for nearly a year. They are universally pronounced the neatest and bestfitting collars extant.

The upper edge presents a perfect cure, free from the angles noticed in all other collars.

The cravat causes no puckers on the inside of the turndown collar—they are AS SMOOTH INSIDE AS OUTSIDE—and therefore perfectly free and easy to the neck.

The Garotte Collar has a smooth and evenly-finished The Garotte Collar has a smooth and evenly-innished edge on BOTH SIDES.

These Collars are not simply flat pieces of paper cut in the form of a collar, but are MOULDED AND SHAPED TO FIT THE NECK.

They are made in "Novelty" (or turn-down style,) in every half size from 12 to 17 inches, and in "Eureka" (or Garotte,) from 13 to 17 inches, and packed in "solid sezes," in neat blue cartoons, contain 2100 each: package for Travellers, Army and Navy Officers.

EVERY COLLAR is stamped.

The Press FRIDAY, MAY 13, 1864. THE WEEK OF BATTLES.

THE GRANDEST CHAPTER OF THE WAR. Battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, and of the Po.

Lists of Pennsylvanians Disabled or Killed.

clares that he has ended the sixth day of very heavy fighting, with the result much in our favor. He proposes to fight out this whole grand struggle on his present line, if it takes him all summer. There is no doubt of his confidence—there can be no doubt of the result; and, when his great work is accounplished, we shall have had the longest, grandest, and most desperate series of battles which the world has known. The tide of battle which rolled from Richmond in the memorable week's disaster of two years ago is now rolling back against the rebels, bringing with it all the revenge of time. A re-sume of the operations of thus far [will prove a valuable record: PRELIMINARY—THE ADVANCE.

PRELIMINARY—THE ADVANCE.

When the shades of Tuesday, May 3, fell upon the Army of the Potomac, that vast tented field gave forth no sign of movement. All was screne as it had been for months before, but all was ready for the signal from the lips of him whom the nation had called to the command of its armies. By midnight, however, this peaceful scene had changed. Every corps of the army was in motion, marching to a destination unknown even to the corps commanders, and directed to the accomplishment of the well-matured plans of General Grant. By the morning of Wednesday the late camps had been abandoned, and the men marched to new scenes, and fairly energed upon the campaign which was destined to be one of victory or defeat.

The losts of Lee's army lay upon the south bank and the men marched to new scenes, and fairly entered upon the campaign which was destined to be one of victory or defeat.

The hosts of Lee's army lay upon the south bank of the Rapidan, where they had entrenched themselves and rested comparatively undisturbed since the battle of Mine Run, late in the autumn. All day on Wednesday the Army of the Potomac pursued its way over a distance of more than fifteen miles across Germanna and Ely's fords to the [Rapidan, to execute a well-devised flank movement. All day long the steady stream of men and munitions of war continued to file along the roads and across the river. Quietly they moved, stepping with the tread of veterans, each man determined to do his duty manfully and nobly, be the consequences what they might. By dark, on Wednesday night, the 5th Corps, General Warren, the 6th, General Sedgwick, and the 2d, General Hancock, had crossed the Rapidan, and bivouncked upon the south bank and the historic field of Chancellorsville.

The cavalry advance, which preceded the main army some distance, had encountered a small force of the enemy, but no engagement of importance took place, and the reconnoissance was effected with slight loss. Thus far the advance had been successful, and that night the mighty army rosted from the fatigues of the day, in order to prepare for the bloody scenes of the morrow. All felt that Thursday's sun would not set without witnessing a battle, for the lines had been thrown so far forward that a collision must inevitably follow any further advance. Notwithstanding this, however, not a man faltered nor a cheek blanched with fear. The issue must be met; the period for action had arrived; the army was prepared; and each streve to do his duty in this trying hour.

THURSDAY, MAY 5—BATTLE OF THE WIL-THURSDAY, MAY 5-BATTLE OF THE WIL-DERNESS.

DERNESS.

Farty in the morning the 5th and 6th Corps were in motion, and, about 8 o'clock, the centre of the 5th had reached the intersection of the turnpike and plank roads leading from Fredericksburg to Orange Court House, and near the "Wilderness." In its front was a broken and very irregular table land, densely covered with/dwarf timber and undergrowth, and almost impassable. The eye could penetrate but a short distance into this maze of forest, and nature seemed to have exerted her curious handiwork to veil all beyond. Here was a dark curtain completely hiding the country in front, and presenting a barrier to rapid progress, or even the most careful manœuvring. The turnpike at this point was crossed at right angles by the road leading to Spottsylvania Court House. The army halted in column. The 2d Corps was on the left, and the sth and 6th occupied Corps was on the left, and the sta and of a occupied the centre and right respectively.

The army thus remained motionless, momentarily expecting the order to march, until about noon, when the headquarters standard was fixed near Wilderness Tavern, and corps commanders began to eather around it awaiting the order for a further expecting the order to march, until about noon, when the headquarters standard was fixed near Wilderness Tavern, and corps commanders began to gather around it, awaiting the order for a further movement. A consultation ensued, notes were examined, but still no welcome order to march. At last Gen. Warren left headquarters, took the head of his corps, and the 5th filed over the point of a hill to the left of Wilderness Tavern, and upon the summit of this eminence headquarters were removed. Line of battle was then formed with the whole army, and scarcely had this been accomplished, when the sound of dropping shot indicated that skirmishing had begun. These cridences of strife were heard to the right and south of Wilderness Tavern, and proceeded from the engagement of a brigade of Griffin's division of the 5th Corps with the enemy, who had thrown one of his corps forward, preliminary, to an attack on the whole line.

The battle raged fierely with this portion of the command until noon, when it became general. The brigade had scarcely formed for action when it was met by a heavy volley of musketry, and the rebels, taking advantage of the momentary confusion, rushed forward at a charge. The ground had not been perfectly reconnotired, and, in an attempt to employ artillery in repulsing the charge, two guns of Battery D, 1st New York, were captured. These, however, were all the trophies the rebels succeeded in taking during the enline action. The charge was repulsed with infantry, and Warren's corps soon became engaged against heavy masses of the enemy. Shortly after General Sedgwick's army became involved. The rebels pressed forward steadily, but were as steadily forced back, and the lines of the army, after repeated assaults, remained intact.

The Strife here was trifling compared with that in which General Hancock was engaged.

but were as stendily forced back, and the lines of the army, after repeated assaults, remained intact.

The strife here was triffing compared with that in which General Hancock was engaged. Against him Longstreet, one of Lee's ablest licutenants, had been thrown, and such was the nature of the ground that the fight was one almost wholly of musketry. No artiflery could be brought to bear, and as the fight progrossed the sound of small arms became terrific. Charge after charge by Longstreet was met and repulsed by volleys of musketry delivered at short range and with terrible effect. Gradually, however, the enemy drew off, the firing ceased, night fell, and the battle was over for the day. The enemy had failed to drive us back from the field, although his efforts to do so were most persistent. He had had advantage of a naturally protected field of operations in which to manocuvre, and this enabled him to handle his forces with the utmost rapidity, secreey, and skill. The army was compelled to remain watchful along the whole line, not knowing at what point the enemy might be most expected, and uncertain how to manecuvre to foil the adversary. Yet, with all these advantages, Lee was unable to accomplish his object; and, though victory did not perch upon our eagles, it certainly did not rest upon his. Lee, in his official despatch to the rebel Secretary of War, states that the attack was made by our troops; whereas it is evident from our accounts that the robels themselves made the attack, for they enme out from their entrenchments on Mine Run with the probable intention of driving the Army of the Potomne back across the Rapidan. In this engagement the rebels lost General. J. M. Jones and Colonel Warren, of the 10th Virginia, killed, and General Stafford mortally wounded. We lost heavily in the battle, and among the officers killed was Gen. Alexandor Hays, of Pennsylvania. Lee made two ineffectual attempts on this day to cut our army in two, but did not succeed. His strength was developed by the movement, and Genera

Lieutenant General Grant was upon the field during the afternoon, and seemed satisfied with the progress of affairs.

THE BATTLE OF FRIDAY, MAY 6.

This day scarcely dawned ere the engagement was resumed. Longstreet massing his columns against General Hancock's corps with great determination. It was alternately pushed backward and charged forward, and once was driven close to his field-works; but, rallying again, he drove the rebels before him with great slaughter. He had been fighting with indomitable courage for several hours, until finally he was reinforced by Burnside, and the contest on this portion of the line cased. But the corps had suffered terribly; they fought with the utmost heroism, and are deserving of the highest praise. The cnemy failing to pierce the lines at this point, next huried his masses against Sedgwick's corps, the 6th. This attack was conducted by A. P. Hill, and was most desperately made. The right of the 6th was turned, and almost instantly Milroy's old Drigade was swallowed up, with the loss of Brigadier General Seymour, of Olustee fanne, and General Scholer, who were taken prisoners. The disaster was retrieved, however, and the enemy, in turn, met with a repulse.

The safety of the army, at this moment, was insured by General Sedgwick, for, had the rebels succeeded in overpowering him, the Army of the Potomac would have been cut in twain, and it would have required the utmost skill of the generals, as well as the most indomitable courage and heroic self-sacrifices of the men, to have checked the onward tide of the enemy, and saved the army from ruin. Happily, however, the danger was averted, and the rebels, having been foiled in their purpose, withdrew from the field. In the early part of the day Brigadier General Wadsworth was killed. Thus had the enemy attempted to pursue the tactics peculiar to Lee, of hurling he any masses of troops, first upon one and then upon the other wing and centre of our army. He failed in every endeaver, however, and was compelted to give up the contest an mighthal, dufficit at all points. Thus closed the second day of the battle of the Wilderness.

OPERATIONS OF SATURDAY, MAY 7.

After the terrible struggle of the last two days, and the vigor with which the enemy had fallen upon and outflanked General Sedgwick's corps at the very last moment on Friday, the Union army was in anything but a hopeful condition. Judging by the temper of the men, the feeling was that our troops, although repulsing every attack, had perhaps on the whole, the worst of the fighting. The valle of the rehels was so desperate and the handling of the rehels was so desperate and the handling of the two armies. From all appearances Lée seeme than they had anticipated. The battle recommended however at daylight between the advance pickets of the two armies. From all appearances Lée seeme into Union army, when Lieut. General Grent and General Meade came up to the seeme of action. The men, who had been fighting all day, giadly halled the Lieutenant General by loud choors. The weather throughout was exceedingly warm, and marched out on the Wednesday preceding, had have the continuous march and fighting of a whole week, the army imperatively demanded rost. The six days' provisions, with which the troops had marched out on the Wednesday preceding, had have them conveyed to the rear and attended to. The wounded had have true out, and it became necessary to replenish the haversacks and company wagons. A halt was been force made till the supply wagons should be emptied. The number of wounded also was fearfully large, and it would be inhuman not to bend the whole energies of the army to have them conveyed to the rear and attended to. The wounded, in all, are estimated as high as mineteen thousand mon, which includes, of course, all the battles. The killed outright are supposed to number three thousand fried hundred, while of missing there are in the neighborhood of five thousand, almost all of whom had been captured in the fights of Thursday and Friday. Monday was well spent in bringing forward the a the freshest of the various commands, was ordered to the front to drive the rebels from the village, and occupy the lower bank of the Po. Ewell's corps contested the advance, but Hancock's command went valiantly on, and for two hours one of the most desperate fights of the whole four took place.

There are two theories current in the army touching the movements of Lee; one is that it is only Ewell's corps with which we have been fighting for the last two days, and that the rest of Lee's army has fallen back to Richmond to overwhen the forces under Generals Smith and Gilmore. The general opinion, however, is that all of Lee's army is still near to the front. It was on Monday that General John Sedgwick was killed by a ball from a rebel sharpshooter, while engaged in directing his gunners. TUESDAY-PRELIMINARIES OF THE BATTLE OF THE PO.

TUESDAY—PRELIMINARIES OF THE BATTLE OF THE PO.

Mr. Swinton writes to the New York Times: The military situation at this hour (Tuesday, 12 M.,) finds the line of the army drawn around Spottsylvania Court House in the arc of a circle, the concave toward us. The enemy is in force at that point, and seems determined to dispute the passage. I mentioned in my letter of yosterday that the two armies ran a race from the Wilderness for Spottsylvania, but unfortunately the enemy won the race. This should not be interpreted as conveying any censure on the Army of the Potomac, which has marched with a new inspiration and a rapidity never before seen in its history. But the very necessities of our condition as the invading party, with our old base abandoned and a new one not yet opened, oblige us to take immense trains, which, of course, retard the general movement of the army; the enemy constantly falling back on their lasse, and favored by their very poverty, can readily beat us on an equal start. It would certainly have been a great point gained had we been able to make Spottsylvania Court House in advance of the enemy. An inspection of the map will show you that it is an important strategic point, being the point of divergence of the roads leading sonthward, both to the right and left.

The rebels have as yet shown no disposition to assume the offensive at this point. It—was confidently expected on Sunday night that an attack would take place on Hancock's front, toward the Catharpen road, and on a line with the Brock road. The troops showed great diligence in throwing up breastworks, and a brigade was advanced out for a mile or more from the main front over some cleared land. About an hour before sunsot this attack was made. Immediately upon the retirement of the advance brigade, the enemy charged toward our line, but never reached it. They put a few guns in position, and shelled the woods for awhile, but did no harm. A small number of General Birney's troops, on which the shelled the woods for awhile, but did no harm.

withdrew, having received more harm than they had done.

Before this attack, our advance could see Hill's corps marching south to join the main body opposing our progress in front on the branch of the Po. As it was necessary to hold this position until it was certain the enemy were gone, General Hancock did not stay the progress of the men engaged in forming breastworks, but added another line in the open ground around Todd's Tavern, a regiment of heavy artillery working all night to finish them. It was a very pretty sight, the lanterns of the workmen hung to the blossoming cherry trees, and picturesque groups of soldiers digging andlerecting the works, while batteries stood harnessed up; their cannoniers lying on the ground around the carriages, in wait for any emergency.

At sunrise scouts advanced and found the enemy in small force; and about noonday, Gen. Hancock left Gen. Wand's brigade to hold the position, and

At sunrise scouts advanced and found the enemy in small force; and about noonday Gen. Hancock left Gen. Ward's brigade to hold the position, and advanced with his corps toward the river Po, which by night he had, after considerable resistance, passed. Gen. Burnside, pushing out on the extreme left, advanced to a place in front of Sedgwick's (now Wright's) corps. A reconnoissance by two regiments was made. Those advanced some distance without meeting much resistance. At the same time the cannonade along some portions of the front was quite brisk between our and the rebel artillery. the ront was quite brisk between our and the rong artillery.

The road which our troops faced runs from Orange Court House to Fredericksburg, and is forty-one miles long. It crosses no river. Proceeding from Orange Court House, we come at a distance of ten miles to Verdiersville; ten miles further brings us to Farker's store; six miles further to Wilderness; five miles further to Chancellorsville; ten miles more to Fredericksburg. THE BATTLE OF THE PO.

Battle broke out at half past 1 P. M. on Tuesday, the most stubborn the world has known. A description was given in our second edition of yesterday, and in our later news we shall ro doubt have further details. Grant and Meade were in the saddle. Ewell had left for Richmond, it was thought, but on this day he returned, and Lee's entire force was engaged. Wright's corps moved and captured a line of works. Burnside moved on the enemy's right to counteract a threatened flank attack of the enemy. drove him from his first rifle-pils, and captured from two to three thousand prisoners. General Grant's despatch states that we have over five thousand prithan ours—the advantage resting entirely with us. Prisoners unite in saying that Lee is dumbfounded by the present conduct of our army. REBEL ACCOUNTS

The following is published in the Richmond Dispaich, of the 7th instant, as the despatch of its special correspondent "Sallust," and gives an ac-count of the second day's—Friday's—engagement: "ORANGE COURT HOUSE, Friday, May 6,
"The enemy renewed the attack this morning with great violence, attempting to turn our right and get between us and Richmond. Every attack some distance on the left, but he is very stubborn on the right, but is now giving way.

"Lieutenant General Longstreet had turned the enemy left, and was steadily pushing him back, when he was severely wounded. He was shot by Mahone's Brigade through mistake. Gen. Longstreet is doing well. He and his command saved the day on the right. The artillery took but little part on either side, on account of the woods and the nature of the ground. Our loss is very severe, including many vulumble officers. Gen. Wadsworth, of the Yankee army, was killed. The battle was fought in the wilderness, and will probably be designated as 'the battle of the Wilderness.' The enemy has been pushed back toward Chancellorsville and Fredericksburg. Everything looks well for our success."

ricksburg. Everything looks well for our success."

To complete all the rebel material illustrations of the battle of the Wilderness, I append a copy of a despatch from Gen. John Pegram to Gen. Joh. Stuart, which was obtained by the capture of the courier carrying it, and which shows the important fact that Longstreet, after fighting our right under Sedgwick in the morning, made a rapid march, united with A. P. Hill, and assisted in the tremendous cifort made to roil up Hancock's left on the afternoon of the same day, fall the circumstances of which I have detailed in former letters:

General: I learn from Gen. R. E. Lee that the enemy attacked Ewell early this morning, and were repulsed as usual. There was some confusion in Hill's corps, but as soon as Longstreet enne up he commenced driving the enemy, and has been doing so up to this time, 7.20 P. M. Gen. Lee says you can render him very essential service by a vigorous attack on the enemy's left.

Oddly enough, the attack was made near Todd's Tavern, but Stuart was badly whipped by our cavalry, and the essential service was not rendered.

Speech of Wendell Phillips.
At a meeting of the American Anti-slavery Society, held in Dr. Cheever's church, New York, on Wednesday, Mr. Phillips made a speech, from which Mr. Phillips said he was fully aware of the favorable auspices under which the society has met. No man can fail to see that in a single year God has done for them what it has usually required centuries to accomplish. To-day, the largest army raised in this half century does battle, in the name of the nation, for that slave who, for twenty years, we have almost in vain begged the nation to remember.

Virginia is drenched with blood year after year, in the determination, the resolute purpose, of the Northern people to carry their civilization down to the Gull and to lift the negro into the equal level of political and civil existence. The President has his name floating in the blessing: Europe and Christendom, not because of his office, but because he has done what this society, for a quarter of a century, has hopolessly entreated of the nation. I am not, said the speaker, claiming the merit that we have done this act; I am not a lunatic; but I am asking you to remember how this work has been taken out of our hands, and almost accomplished. Mr. Phillips said he was fully aware of the fa-the sone of course because the world bolleves him an Abolitionist. Let us not forget the terrible cost at which the sone was a sone of the control of the sone of How Salt Lake City is Commanded.—A correspondent of an Eastern paper, who has lately visit ted Salt Lake City, thus speaks of the chief city of the Mormons:

The Mecca of the Mormons occupies one-fourth of the bottom of a huge saucer, the remaining three-fourths being at present partly arable land and partly desert. The Wasatch mountains form the sides of a saucer, and, with portions of another range, encirele the city, shutting it in from the outer world with a wall too high for even the odor of its sanctity to escape over the mountain tops.

Approaching from the west, you cross the Jordan, have the Great Sait Lake to your left and the city spread out in quadrilaterals before you, more like a buce much than an actual city. High up and areas. spread out in quadrilaterals before you, more like a luge map than an actual city. High up, and away to the right, occupying what is geographically termed "a bench," is Camp Douglas, the big guns of which frown down upon the city, three miles off, to remind Brigham Young that though he is "boss" of the saints, Uncle Sam is the bigger boss of both saints and sinners.

Col. BARTLETT.-Col. William F. Bartlett, of Cot. Bartlett.—Col. William F. Bartlett, of the Massachusetts 57th, who is reported among the wounded in the recent battles, is one of the most brave and indomitable officers in the service. Twice before he has been severely wounded. He entered the service in the Massachusetts 20th Regiment, and lost a leg before Yorktown. Recovering from this wound, and supplied with one of Palmer's artificial legs, he again entered the service, in command of the Massachusetts 49th. He was severely wounded in gallantly leading an assault upon Port Hudson, and was obliged to return home. Here he improved his time not only in recruiting his health, but in raising the Massachusetts 57th Veteran Regiment, at the head of which he took the field again, scarcely a week since. We are glad to notice that this brave officer, who is but twenty-two years of age, is reported as wounded but slightly.

The New York Evening Post of to-day says:
Gold opened at 175, and gradually sold down to 1734, closing at 1734.
The loos market is more active, at 5½ to 7 per cent.
The stock market opened without much animation, and at the close there was a decided disposition to sell. Governments are firm. Coupons of 1851 are wanted at 114, five-iwenty compons at 106, seven-thirties at 1104, and certificates at 98½.

Bank shares are strong, State stocks dull, mining shares heavy, and railroad bonds inactive. Railroad shares are weak, and there is a decided disposition to sell, the brokers having a salutary anxiety to curisil their operations during the present incertitude as to the future financial policy of Mr. Chase.
