Special Correspondence of the Press. IN THE FIELD, May 9, 1864. REFLECTIONS. The air is filled with sounds of strife. Since Wednesday I have listened to little but the roar of cannon, rolls of musketry and drums, the clangor of spur and sabre, or the more piercing tones of fite and bugle. Along the turnpike and plank-road, both of which lead to Orange. Court House, are wounded men, with crimsoned garments, palid faces, parched throats, and tottering step. Some air is stirring, and the Virginia mocking-bird whistle in hard, unfeeling, unsympathetic strain from bush and branch.

We are in the Wilderness; a region of swamp and impenetrable thickers. Drinking water is very scarce. The sun glares down in fiery fury upon the combatants. combatants. The wounded cry for water, and the dying soldier fixes his fast-glazing eyes upon a lovely mirage. In imagination he sees shady nooks, and babbling brooks of crystal water. Alas! poor fellow he crystas leaves the transfer of the crystas leaves he crystal water. low, he expires before his lips are wet; the halffinished prayer struggles boarsely from his parched throat; the hands clutch convulsively; his face is urned to the sun. He is dead. WAR'S WORKS.

Pass through Virginia—mark well her thousand battle-fields, and see what war has done—is this lay doing. What will not man's inhuman, insatiale passions do! Desolation, destruction, despair, leath, are everywhere visible. Marks of man's feocity—his inhumanity to man—linger in mournful traces upon this world, long after the vengoral actors in the bloody scenes have crumbled to atoms upon the face of the earth they have marred with esolating struggles.

EXPLANATORY—BREAK CAMP, MARCH!

How a battle is being fought this day, and on this side the Rapidan, requires explanation. In brief, it was thus: Two divisions of our cavalry crossed the river Tuesday evening, leaving Gen. Torbett's division at the foot of Pony Mountain, near Culpeper. About midnight the 2d Corps marched over, and were followed by the 5th and 6th Corps. were followed by the 5th and 6th Corps. The troops crossed at Ely's and Germanna Fords, while the great majority of the trains went higher up, to Culpeper Mine Ford, where the landing was much beter, and a pontoon bridge had been laid.

Every circumstance of the march is fresh in my memory. Three several times I had marched along these roads. Every man was pugnacious, hopeful, buoyant. With chagrin I acknowledge we invariably returned, having penetrated at the best no farther than Mine river, having accomplished no thing but a long, wearisome march, and the death

Wednesday was what the Virginians calls one of the hot days of May. How lovely it was, depite the sun and dust, that arose from the heavy tramp of the armed hosts, I shall never forget. When the bright sun heaved his broad face over the summit of Clark's Mountain, the rebel signal station, the vapors lying low in the valley, and the mists that had settled upon the summit of Pony Mountain, and the steep sides of the Blue Ridge, began to melt and fice away. All objects had a dreamy, hazy appearance. Far to the right is a long line of dust-occasionally the fitful gleam of bayonets is seen. It is the last of the 6th Corps. To the left is Culpeper, care-worn and still, and far beyond the Bull lun blountain. The trees are beautiful in their spring foliage; every leaf is new formed, and, trembling with delight, seemed stirfed by the breath of birds, fluttering from spray to spray. Viewed from the mountain, the scene appeared like a vast panorama, fresh from the pencil of the Divine artist.

ABOUT MARCHING. An army with a superfluity of baggage, like our own, should be shifted several times from their winter quarters before making a general advance. The rebels always travel in light marching order, and it this respect have the advantage over our more heavily-accounted soldiers. Great rolls of blankets, an enormous knapsack, filled with articles accumu lated during a winter of idleness, must be reduced, or entirely lost. As a general thing, the new recruit clings'to his baggage until he is worn out and completely exhausted. If the army could be moved about three times before the general advance, these dead weights would be given up by piecemeal, and many men saved.

F. F. V's.

About four miles from Germanna Ford lives an aged lady, named Mrs. Daggett, a lone, lorn creature and a widow. She has an old-fashioned miniature of her own proper person, when the bloom was on her cheeks, hanging on the wall. She refers to it as often as Mynheer Speckunkrout was wont to do with his signboard, whereon was a representation of the German host, in water colors, red, white, and blue. Each morning when he arose, after looking complacently at the swinging prototype of himself, he would quote the words of his frau: "If one did not know as how it wash not Mynheer Speckunkrout, one vould actually think it vash." Mrs. D. entertained the same thoughts about her picture on thewall, but she was a Virginian, and "down on niggers," and used different language. She was "pootier than that thar pieter on the wall when a gal—she was." Her log mansion had one other inmate. Mrs. D. had a daughter. She was called Bella, and bellowed incessantly at the poor Yankees who passed her door. She was poetic and romantic. The cabin was without whitewash or chinking. Miss Bella called it "Our Lodge." The Yankees and niggers were alike in her eyes, but on her breast, next to her heart, she wears a white Maltese cross-the badge of the 2d Division, 5th Corps. It was taken from the cap of the soldier who was safeguard at their house. Although she despised the Universal Yankee Nation, a strong attachment for this single particle of Yankeedom is cordially avowed. On our return from Mine Run I found Miss B. in a picturesque position. Enthroned upon a large miscellaneous heap of potatoes, onions, and cabbage, the entire yield of her garden that season, she sat, with spread skirts, glittering eye, offended majesty; both hands wielded a large pole, ever and anon bring-ing it heavily upon the head of some hungry Yankee, who, more venturesome than his comrades, would ndeavor to get a cabbage. The old lady ably seconded the younger one by scolding all the while in shrill, monotonous terms. Their united efforts were unavailing; the vegetables were all "gobbled," I passed on, leaving them, as I thought, to starve. uriosity led me to see if they had become extinct. They were still living in the old style. My ears caught the same sharp tones, telling the same stories of devastation and despair, in the same words. This starved. They seem to feed on air, and the food being unwholesome, makes their words bitter. Seldom s a curse against the Yankees far from their lips. THE BATTLE OF THE WILDERNESS. Our troops crossed the river without opposition. Lee's army, swelled to prodigious numbers, stretched from Gordonsville to Parker's store, a distance of over forty miles. Two roads run parallel from Fredericksburg to Orange Court House. One is plank and the other turnpike. Grant, by a movethe enemy's right with the intention of slipping in between Richmond and the Army of Northern Vir-ginia; a very dangerous novement for a large army to make with as large a force of the enemy in front. There is no doubt Lee left this avenue open and unguarded that we might cross and be drawn into a pare; then he could move on either flank at pleasure while we marched, or cut our lines in two, and demolish the Army of the Potomae before it quitted the green mazes of that almost interminable wilderness. He was gravely mistaken. The army was manœuvred with greater rapidity and precision than he thought possible. Meade arranged every-thing so completely that the troops could face either way and fight upon both flanks. A division of caalry, an advance of the 2d Corps, moved up the left side toward Chancellorsville, and bivouacked there for a brief season. The 5th Corps, with toward Wilderness Tavern. Wadsworth's 4th division, formerly part of the 1st Corps, had the head of the column. The enemy was discovered near Higgerson's house, one mile west of the road leading from Wilderness Tavern to Parker's store. Ewell's corps, about thirty-four thousand strong, was at the same time moving rapidly, with heavy column, down the turnpike. His intention was to cut our line in two fragments near Wilderness Tavern. Wadsworth quickened his pace, and made a ficrce onset upon the rebel flank. Our skirmishers were advanced too far in front of tunity to lengthen and strengthen his front, which was quickly turned towards us. Crawford was or the right, Wadsworth held the centre, with Griffin on his left, while Robinson was held in reserve. The 119th Pennsylvania and 7th Reserves were thrown out as advance skirmishers. Our men forced the enemy back upon his reserve, where his position was firm and immovable. They occupied the crest of a hill, the only bald spot visible upon the rugged surface of the country. In front was a deep ravine

a soft morass. Down into the depths of the ravine rushed the men, yelling with delight. Soon they were seen climbing up the steep sides of the guleh in the face of a murderous fire. They never paused to listen to the musical cadence of the countless balls as they cut the air about them with a whiz-z-z. Comrades dropped by scores, but all unswamp-floundering, firing, splashing, spluttering, swamp and ditch survived the charge. They were so broken, a respectable line was scarcely formed on the hard ground, in front of the rebel muskets, before it was broken by a heavy volley. Away rushed the same men, who, but a few moments bepushed the same men, who, but a few moments before, were so brave. Then they seemed anxious to fall nobly fighting; now they run in the direction of those who would survive to fight some other day. The 7th Reserves and a portion of the 119th were cut off from their brigades, and fell into the hands of the enemy. We had but a single line of battle. It was too weak for the three lines against which it fought. Two guns of Battery D, 1st New York, were captured.

Warren then moved his corps by the right flank down the road to Mr. Lacey's house, and haited. Sedgwick had now got his corps on the right, and Hancock having rested his men, marched out to, ward the Orange and Fredericksburg plank road. Getty's division of the 6th Corps and a portion of the 2d Corps had been desperately engaged with the rebel Hill, who was pushing them hard.

Charges were made and received alternately. The men were exhausted by fury and heat, but still fought wickedly.

Baxter's brigade of Robinson's division, and Col. Stone's, of Wadsworth's division, 5th Corps, entered the melce in good time. Over three quarters of a mile they pushed the rebels at the point of the bayonot, driving them from height and hallow, from within three hundred yards of the plank road. About six o'clock Thursday evening our long lines blazed intermittently. First the right flank was ablaze; then a rattle of muskerry, whose language was mutilation and death, would be heard, intimately blended with the wild war-yell of the rebols. This would be their charge. At times our mon would dash out, with a long row of bayonets gleam-ing breast high, would leap forth on a charge, and the wila hurran that followed the prolonged roll of the rifles spoke plainly of success. Thus, from right to left, from wing to centre, the tide of conflict swayed, always strong, always fierce. Ground had been lest and gained, and bloody footprints stained the soil, and glastly corpses looked with distended, un-meaning eyes upon the stars that glittered coldly upon the unconscious dead. Thus have they ever done-They were not bloodshot after the "Social War which cost Rome 300,000 lives; why should they wince now? whom we had fought bitterly all day, one might say throw himself between Lee and the rebel capital to compel the former to fight fairly, and then break and pulverize the boastful but brave Army of North-extended the left of the 3d Corps by tacking on a portion of his command. The best possible disposi-Long ere the sun began to suck up the unwhole-some vapors of the Wilderness Hancock engaged the robels. Barlow's brigade of the 1st Division, 2d Corps, formed the extreme left. The firing began on the right, and soon extended along the various divisions. Col. Frank, with one brigade of the 1st Division, was ordered to move on Hill's flank. About an hour after, this brigade had executed the order, and the rebels were driven two miles and a large number of prisoners captured. They were moving along very prosperously. But Longstreet coming in lengthened Hill's lines, and thus flanked the 3d Brigade, 1st Division, 2d Corps. At this time the 57th New York were sent to Frank's aid, and succeeded in some manner in reaching Hill's rear. This regiment lost their colonel (Chapman) the day before, and now their skirmish line was captured. Longstreet and Hill were too strong for Hancock. We had to relinquish the ground gained early in the morning, and fall back on our entrenchments. The 2d Division, 2d Corps, behaved well; their charges were fearfully earnest, and the dead rebels in front of their line proved their prowess. Philadelphia should be proud of her brigade. Baxter, of the 72d, is wounded, and Lieut. Col. Kochersperger, who led the 71st in every charge, wounded.

Burnside came up in time to give Hancock a breathing spell. Failing to outflank us on the left, or gain the coveted height which was the centre and keystone of our line, the rebels began to mass on our right. forces already there fell upon Sedgwick. It was fearful, frightful to behold. They charged six ranks deen, and actually tramped our soldiers under foot. Nothing but sullen, dogged brute courage saved the day at this point. Seymour's and Shaler's brigades were lost in the human vortex. It was not a fight, a battle, a contest; but a whirlwind—a tempest of fire, of smoke; a Babel of horrible sounds. Sedgwick rallied his men when the chargers had lost their impetuosity, and drove them back. Some strange mistake had been made. A large eminence on the right had been gained by Sedgwick in the morning. Its sides and summit had been baptized loned, and the rebels thus came in on us. Our lines could boast of but one favorable piece of fighting ground—our centre—which Lee coveted, but lared not come for it. Just in the rear were General Patrick's headquarters, provost marshal of the army. Almost 2,000 rebels were here under guard. A mysterious skedaddle arose among the stragglers.

A few rebels succeeded, in the gloom of evening, in making their way almost to these prisoners, many of whom jumped on their feet and exclaimed "Here comes Old Lee's eavalry!" In an instant there was excitement, and a running to and fro of countless throngs. One new recruit came panting up to me and told me to run, for the rebels were at hand.

"They have captured nearly all of the 6th Corps," he added, "and I am all that is left of our division. I was unable to refrain from a quiet laugh, although the young soldier seemed sincere. But the rebels were at this minute withdrawing, and the day was About half past eight in the evening a rebal bet. gade charged a portion of Birney's lines. Our skirmishers and pickets had been called in our thought we were retreating. Quietly they came up to our earthworks, and when within a respectable distance they charged with a prolonged yell. About a dozen yards from the breastworks, and our men rise to their feet-but one tremendous volley is fired-our men charge with a wild hurrah, and in a few minutes the charging party are no more. Again a solemn Sabbath stillness settled down along the lines; it was broken about 11 o'clock by a charge on Warren's lines. It was quickly repulsed. across the river in two days, it could not be done at all. His whole strength was used in the battle of the Wilderness, and it had availed him nothing. He withdrew toward Richmond, our army marching parallel with the rebels. At Spottsylvania Court House we met, and had a severe battle. Our DRAWING RATIONS. ing. The fight was very brisk upon the right, but had not yet reached the 1st Division, 2d Corps, which then occupied the extreme left wing. Men can be merry before death; I have seen them so. The men had just finished breakfast when a rebel commissary sergeant and six men were brought in. They had been detailed to issue the company's rations, and had the provisions with them. What were they, you ask? Two long, lean, lank sides of bacon, one bag "hard tack," one of corn meal. Soon after, three rebels came running into our lines the sergeant for rations.

cavalry, Torbett's division, met the enemy, under Fitz Hugh Lee, near Todd's tavern. They dismounted, and drove them some distance up infantry supports. Torbett was obliged to fall back. Lieutenant Colonel Anderson led the 17th Pennsyl vania into the fight, and won the praise of his superiors as well as the men. General Torbett was wounded. The Maryland Brigade relieved the cavalry. On Monday, General Sedgwick was shot through the head, while superintending the mounting of some artillery in an angle the men had prepared for their reception. The ball entered his eye, and caused instantaneous death. He was a

POLITENESS COSTS NOTHING—IMPOLITENESS EX-PENSIVE.

After the cavalry fight near Todd's Tavern, a large number of rebel wounded were left on the roadside. I noticed one of our cavalrymen dis-mounting in front of a rebel major, wounded in the leg. A canteen was tendered, but brusquely refused. Yankee asked Reb his name and rank. There was no response. Vankee, after a few admonitory remarks about treating people civil, went on his way rejoicing. Saturday we again moved by the flank. The 5th and fought him and Longstreet over four hours. Bartlett's brigade of Griffin's division had the adrance. The 18th Massachusetts and 83d Pennsylvania skirmished in front. On a small clearing near Nye run the rebels had their batteries. Company C, 3d Massachusetts Artillery, and Company D, 3d U.S. Artillery, were stationed on the right fork of the road. During the entire day there was fighting—one division of the 6th Corps coming to Warren's relief before nightfall. There is rest for the weary at last. The fearful fight in that jungle—The Wilderness—rapid marching, and bad water, have sorely tried everysoul. It is coming the seventh day since we crossed the Rapidan. If we can get upon open ground, where our artillery will be of service, our advance will be much

PHILADELPHIA, May 13, 1864. The Bee Movement. To the Editor of The Press:

Sin: Are not the ladies of Philadelphia going to take up this movement in respect to the use of dress goods of domostic manufacture only? I am writing in "patient expectation" to see the true women of this city take some initiatory steps in this most praiseworthy and benedicial plan. In private circles it is (so far as my observation goes, exceedingly popular, and only waits a committee, a spokesman, and a public occasion, to manifest to the world that there are in Philadelphia of "noble women not a few."

Let us see the device of this organization (a bee cahibited somewhere on every lady's dress, and allow me, Mr. Editor, to press you into the service, by constituting you a buzzing bee, to noise this subject abroad, while, in the most unassuming manner, I subscribe myself, most truly,

PATRIOTIC PRINTERS.—The proprietor, editors, clerks, compositors, pressmen, and carriers of the Harrisburg Pennsylvania Telegraph, have sent a day's offering, anounting to $121.55, to Mrs. E. W. Hutter, to be applied to the fund of the Great Sanitary. Fair. If that sum will not do, they declare their willingness to double it. From the same newspaper establishment seventeen volunteers have gone forth to assist in the suppression of the slaveholders' rebellion, seven of whom are still in the service. DRESS REFORM AND OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS.—
Mrs. Swisshelm writes that the pledge of the ladies' dress reform league in Washington was carried to Mrs. Lincoln, who at once expressed her willingness to sign it and give it her hearty co-operation. Mr. Lincoln was next consulted, and after reading it he remarked, with some appearance of displeasure or alarm: "Ladies, you have no idea what a horne's nest you are stirring up! In the present state of our foreign relations this will never da," &c. It is presumed that the increased tax on imports and the movement to decrease the consumption of foreign luxuries will give great offence abroad. But we had better incur hatred and enmity abroad than embarrassment and ruin at home.

The London Athenaum Club, in the exercise of their privilege to elect annually as members without ballot nine "persons of distinguished enmence in science, literature, or arts, or for public services," have this year nominated the following: The Roy. W. G. Clark, M. A.; Capt. Speke, Pr. E. A. Parks, Col. Sir H. Edwardes, K. C. B.; Lord Dufferin, Professor W. Pole, F. R. S.; and Mr. Anthony Trollope.

Some of the bystanders asserted that he kicked the man after he fell, and that the kicking killed rather than the blow. This, however, is as stoutly denied by others. The facts will doubtless appear upon examination this morning, before the recorder, in whose court Smith will be produced from the station-house cell, where all night he lay in irons.—Memphis Argus, May 5.

COSTLY BOOKS.—A few days since, the library of the late John Allen, of New York, was sold, the books nearly all bringing very high prices. One little volutine, entitled "Eclibris Indian Bible," brought eight hundred and twenty-five dollars; "Dibdin's Bibliomania" sold for seven hundred and twenty dollars; "Chatlo's Wood Engrayings," for one hundred and two dollars; "Burnet's History of his own time," for one hundred and sixty dollars; Currie's edition of "Burns' Poems," with Cremek's "Reliques of Burns," for two hundred dollars; and Byron's "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers," with one hundred and forty-five portraits and forty-fewr-autographs, for one hundred and thirty dollars.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL. THE MONEY MARKET.

PRILADELPHIA, May 13, 1864.

Gold fluctuated very widely to-day, ranging from 175 down to 170, and up to 172½; the complexion of the wirr news, of course, determining the price. Government securities were somewhat weak, and a shade lower than yesterday. The money market was very easy at accommodating rates.

The stock market was decidedly "slumpy," and a general concession in price took place. Mineral sold down to 2½; Organic sold at 1½; Cherry Ruyar 7, 6½. lown to 214; Organic sold at 1%; Cherry Runat 7; 614 down to 2%; organic sold at 13%; Cherry kunat 7; 63% was bid for Irwin; McClintock sold at 4%; Reading sold at 65; North Pennsylvania at 32; Philadelphia and Ericlat 33; Catawissa preferred at 41½. The absorbing interest in the war news is affecting business, and marked absence of orders was observable. First-class conrities were steady, and the market closed weak. The New York Evening Post of to-day says:
The cheering news from the army has had considerable influence on the market this moving, and with each new rumor and cash later despatch a fresh impulse was given to the operations of specultures either for an advance or fall in gold and the various steerities.
Gold opened at 173, and after solling at 1732, closed dull at 1712,. Exchange is inactive at 190.
The steek market opened dull but closed steady, Governments are strong. Five-twenties are in netive demand at 1062 1062, and certificates are offered at 984; seven-thirties are held for higher rates. These securities at recent quotations are the cheapest securities on the Government list.
State stocks are steady, bank shares strong, coal stocks better, mining shares more active, and rathroad honds firm. Rathroad shares are irregular and firmer.
