TNSURE YOUR LIFE

All by herself in a cottage knitting. No, not all alone; for there was the cat, Close by her foot, on the corn-husk mat; And the old dog, lazily winking his eyes To chase from their lids the bothersome flies, Lay on his paws at the open door; The chickens-there must have been a score-Came close to his nose. Abroad was heard The chirp of cricket and coo of bird, And a little noise when the leaves were stirr'd: For the life of Nature was all in tune With the quiet and warmth of summer noon. · Twas an ominous calm—to be broken soon, By a storm more fierce than the dread simoon; For two great armies silently came · Close to the cot of the dear old dame. One in blue and the other in gray-The fate of a mighty nation lav On the chances of war that summer day. The fife was mum, And no tap of drum Told what had come The cavalry men Trooped down the glen. Up on the mound, The cannon found Their favorite ground. Down by the run Lurked a monstrous gun. This army in blue and that one in gray, Were getting ready each other to slay, While the little old woman was knitting away! III. The pickets began it-pop, pop, pop, pop ! The old dame heard them but couldn't stop,
She was rounding the heel, and that, you know, Is nicer than narrowing off the toe; She must keep count of the stitches, and so She made her fingers faster go-Holding her breath, Half scared to death-Half scared to death-but she couldn't stop! As the scattering pickets pop, pop, pop, To a steady volley of musketry grew, The old dame's fingers the faster flew. Faster and faster—nor long before
The rilles were drowned in the great gun's roar What with the bother of rounding the heel, And the dread of the cannon's peal on neal, She was so bewildered she didn't know Whether to stay, or where she should go-So she sat in her chair, With a vacant stare, Swinging her gray, head to and fro, Knitting away in a terrible trance, With a pinched and a pallid countenance ! IV. Over the fields-by the tangled screen Of a narrow laurel-lined ravine-Down by the stream-and on the hill-At the great stone fence-and the old stone mill, There was wild work doing that summer day, For a thousand brave men lifeless lay— Fell downward, clasping the bloody sod, Or with dead eyes looking up to God! There was one young boy in a suit of blue. With his tender bosom shot through and through. A pitiful sight! Oh! let us pray— No rebel took aim at him that day, But by mischance, Some shot did glance. Or a careless bullet went wide astray. Oh let us believe that his fate was blast For he lay as an infant lies at rest; His white hands clasped o'er his wounded breast; With a smile on his lip-and the light on his brow, God! could his mother but see him now! Over the stream, past the laurel bloom, A thousand truitors had met their doom. There, all in his elegant suit of gray, A mortally wounded general lay-Plucked by the nation out of the dust, And raised to places of power and trust, Nourished and fed by her loving hand, Sworn doubly in her defence to stand, He was the first of the faithless band Making of knighthood their empty boast, With sacred oath, And plighted troth. And every chivalric virtue lost! e his ignorant dupes he lay Through his flamed eyeballs' gathering gloom, What vision he saw of judgment door I shall not tell; but the mortal dread Of that moment fixed in the face of the dead Makes horrid the lips, the eyes, the brow-God! could all traitors see him now! VI. The battle still nearer and nearer came, To the cot of the dear old knitting dame The great guns made a terrible sound, And the bullets were flying thickly around The little birds had no business where Whirled fiery shells that sang in the air. So they hid away in a precious scare; The rabbits started from under the vine Ran plump into the enemy's lines; The dog at first didn't mind it much, But soon ran howling into his hutch; And plumed and spurred Sir Chantelees Drooped his feathers in craven fear ; Why, even the cat-When the bullets were flying around like hail. And she found that it was of no avail To put up her back and stiffen her tail. Withdrew in rather a hurrled way To the cellar. She wasn't afraid to stay. No more than the colonels who go to the rear, In the heat of battle, are moved by fear; They mean, of course, to come back again, When they've looked "after rations for the men." The tranced dame at the setting of the sun Had rounded the heel-and the foot was done Nor fast nor slow, Her fingers go Steadily on in the way they know, And were just beginning to narrow the toe-When suddenly stocking, needles, and all Were shot away by a four-pound ball! The dame didn't mind it at all, at all. And still she sat in the twilight gray, Scared to death, as one might say, With her absent fingers knitting away ! And there she'd have been till the present day Had not a tall artillery man, Grizzled with smoke and brown with tan. With a voice as loud as his cannon's roar, Bounced suddenly in at the open door! And before she had time for new alarms. And kissed and pressed To his brave young breast, Dear reader, you surely can guess the rest. (For The Press.] Unknown.* AN INCIDENT OF THE WAR. Unknown he died! without a friend Whose tender love might sweetly send Some rays of sunshine o'er the gloom He died !--immured in prison--where Disease and famine fill the air With darts more terrible by far Than Parthians ever threw in war. Unknown he died! while oft, perchance His memory turned with mournful glance Upon the brilliant days of yore, When peace and plenty crowned our shore; When with the loved at home he dwelt, And at the family altar knelt; Or solemn temples humbly trod. And gave his heart's best love to God! O'er his death-sorrows grew clate; And bitter curse and scoff it threw— 'Till o'er his brow the damp death dew Came stealing on, and eyes grew dim, And cursing foes were lost to him, As gates of pearl broke on his sight, And seraphs bore him home to light No mother shed the anguished tear, No children followed him to rest: But in some lonely potter's fieldsole boon to patriots treason yields-Watched over by a faithful God. Nor friendly hand his wants supplied His lonely heart like music stirred? What if upon his deaf'ning ear Fell horrid curse instead of cheer? Nor child, nor wife, nor mother went What if the granite dome of fame Who dauntlessly stood firm and true For God, for Truth, and Freedom, too Think'st thou for this oblivion's night Shall pall his memory from sight? His deeds, his trials, sufferings be Obscured through all eternity? Shall veil their light 'neath raven bars, And e'en the sun "grow dim with years," by insurance.

NARROW ESCAPE.

A horse, attached to a wagon, ran away yesterday Who gives to each his just reward. W. S. * Some time since the Richmond papers gave a list of the Union prisoners who had recently died in that city; and, among them, quite frequently appeared the brief, but suggestive word—"Unknown." The Measuring Worm. To the Editor of The Press:

Sh: A short time since your paper contained soveral articles relative to the destruction of the measuring worm; among them was one suggesting the destruction of the millers by means of bonfires, which method is considered by many persons as feasible. Now, inasmuch as the time has arrived when the millers are flying about the streets, cannot some means be employed for their destruction? Now is the time for action. If we do not wish to see our handsome shade trees ornamented with worms next spring, we must destroy the millers before they lay their eggs; therefore, the best manner to romedy the effect is to destroy the cause. Hoping and trusting that energy will be employed in the matter, I remain, Yours truly, Guyer.

Philadelphia, June 20, 1864. To the Editor of The Press: A horse, attached to a wagon, ran away yesterday morning, and, after going some distance, came in contact with a lamp-post at Seventh and Tasker streets, upsetting the wagon and throwing out the occupant, a young man named George W. Wanamaker. Fortunately he escaped without injury. The horse was badly cut about the body.

MISCELLANEOUS. THE CITY RAILWAY EXTORTION.

It seems that the rise in the price of fare is one of that kind of movements that won't work both ways. The directors are willing to gulp all the money down that comes within reach, but are loth to The directors are willing to gulp all the money down that course within reach, but are loth to disgorge to persons who are justly entitled to it. It is said that the drivers on the Thirteenth and Fifteenth-streets Railway peremptorily refused to work yesterday for less than $1.75 per day. They have been receiving $1.50. The company refused to make the required advance, and a strike was the consequence. Early in the day only six cars were running. Five conductors and a new driver were induced to drive yesterday. One of the conductors was discharged for refusing to drive.

It is well known that this line is doing a first-rate business. Drivers are often on duty eighteen hours out of the twenty-four, and, in case of the detention of trains, they are sometimes on duty twenty-three hours, in which case they receive but $1.55.

Conduct such as this is to be expected from those who, in the face of declaring large dividends, can come forward unblushingly and ask for an increase of fare from their patrons. ARTS, TRADES, AND MANUFACTURES.

Philadelpita is proverbial for its arts, trades, and manufactures, and particularly in the manufacture of fancy soaps and perfumery. Somewhere near in manufactures, and particularly in the manufacture of fancy soaps and perfumery. Somewhere near a quarter of a century since E. Roussell started the business of a perfumer and fancy soap maker, and soon arose to eminence, gradually subsiding into the mineral water business, at which he has imade a fortune. X. Bazin succeeded Mr. R. in the business of fancy soap making, extracts, and perfumes, and his name now may be seen, not only on every lady's toilet table in Philadelphia, but in the metropolis of New York and many other parts of the country, and even in France and England. We claim for the city of Philadelphia a proud pre-eminence for its manufacture of such articles as Mr. Bazin issues, in large quantities every day, from his laboratory on Cherry street, near Ninth. So extensively has his business increased within the past few years, that, to meet the emergency, he was compelled to make an extension of his works.

A fine four-story addition to his manufactory has been completed in the rear of Cherry street, below Ninth, and yesterday afternoon it was duly dedicated to the purpose for which it is intended. The structure is built in the most substantial manner. The first story is appropriated to packing and soapboiling, the second story for grinding soap and pressing, the third story for extracts, and the fourth story as a store-room for the handsome glassware used in the business. The press of Philadelphia was well represented yesterday afternoon. Thore were also in attendance a large number of distinguished gentlemen, who feel an interest in the general success of Philadelphia manufactures. The general success of Philadelphia mode of producing those articles so essential to the comfort of mankind, and so much in use by the ladies and gentlemen of America.

A summer collation was served up, and the cool kind, and so much in use by the ladies and gentlemen of America.

A summer collation was served up, and the cool refreshing luxuries and delicacies spread upon the festive board were arranged in an artistic and tempting style. It may be needless to say, the party enjoyed the things set before them by the bountiful hand of Mr. Bazin. The work of making sarcy soap and perfumery is derived in the first place from steam-power, there being a beautiful ten-horse power engine in the first lower story. The boilers are frequently examined, and every care is used to prevent accident. PETROLEUM.

The conductor of the car refused to change a ten-cent note, and stopping the car, ordered the officer to put him out. The officer complied, and has received his reward for his extra officiousness. A few days ago a lady with an infant in her arms was ordered out of a car on this route, because the conductor could not change a twenty-fivo-cent note! Mayor Henry is an eminent lawyer, and in suspending the officer, he was simply maintaining a sound principle of law. The conductor had no right to call upon an officer to lay violent hands on a citizen. Officers should remember they belong to the public and not to any simple, brutal, or ignorant conductor. POLICEMEN SUSPENDED. DROWNING CASES.

On Sunday evening, about eight o'clock, an unknown boy, aged about fourteen years, fell off a rowboat in the Schuylkill river in front of Fairmount Park, and was drowned. He had sandy bair, and was dressed in a light cont. The coroner took charge of the body.

About nine P. It seems that his employer was bathing in the river, when he was taken with a cramp. The deceased, in order to save him, jumped in and was drowned. His employer reached the bank in safety. The drowned man leaves a wife and six children.

Yesterday morning an unknown white man was found drowned in the Delaware, at Vine-street Yesterday morning about eleven o'clock, a fire broke out in the three-and-a-halfstory building, No. 949 South Second street. The first floor of the building was occupied by Mr. Geo. Ehrenberg for the sale of picture-frames, the second floor was used by Mrs. Matlack as a millinery establishment, and the other parts of the building were used by the families of Mr. Ehrenberg, and Mrs. Matlack. The roofs of both front and back buildings were destroyed. Nearly all the stock in the first and second floors was removed. The furniture in the house was greatly damaged by water. There is no insurance upon it. The fire extended to No. 947, adjoining. This is also a three-and-a-half story front and back building. The first floor was occupied by Mr. Paul J. Field as a hardware store. The other portion of the building was used by Mrs. Elizabeth Gardner as adwelling. Mr. Field's stock is greatly damaged by water. He has an insurance of $4,000 upon it, which will cover his loss. Mrs. Gardner also suffered heavily from water. No. 945 was also slightly damaged by fire and water. Mr. Wm. Willcook is the owner of No. 949, and his loss is nearly covered by insurance.

Geo. Alkins was arraigned before Alderman White yesterday, on the charge of obtaining monoy on falso pretences. It appears that he, together with Joseph II. Thompson, went into partoership several months since for the purpose of carrying on the commission business. Alkins finally persuaded Thompson to go to Barbadoes. The latter had no money, and did not wish to so without some. They both went to Thompson's mother-inlaw, Mrs. Garrigues, No. 457 North Seventh street, to get the loan of some. She handed over a check for $150. Alkins grabbed this, and remarked that he would give him letters of credit to that amount on firms in Barbadoes. Thompson then proceeded to that place, and remained there several months. In the meantime Alkins had succeeded in obtaining $5,000 from Mrs. Garrigues, by making faise representations that the money was for Thompson. The latter never received any, nor could be get any of the letters of credit cashed. He came back to the city and saw Alkins, who told him that be had a large consignment of goods in New York, and would make; it all right. Thompson went on to New York, and found that the goods had porished, and that Alkins was over a thousand dollars in dobt. Goff was standing near the bar, with his back towards the defendant, when a pistol went off, and a bail passed by in close proximity. The dwelling had been ransacked, the goods taken out of bureans, closets, wardrobes, &c. and piled on the beds or strewed over the Boor. Mr. Hoffman came home late in the afternoon, and ringing the bell to get in, probably alarmed the thief, as some articles were left behind, which were tied up to be taken away. MITCHELL, INDICTED FOR THE MURDER OF MAGGIE BAER.

The Commonwealth vs. Wm. Howard Mitchell, alias Magnire The present week having been assigned for the trial of homicide cases, that of Wm. H. Mitchell, the defendant in this case, was called up. He is indicted, it will be remembered, for murder, in having killed a girl named Maggie Baer, by shooting her with a pistol, at the Continental Theatre, on the evening of the 2d of April last. The case being called, Messrs. L. C. Cassidy and Charles W. Brooks, counsel for the prisoner, made a notion that the case be continued until the next term, upon the ground of the absence of a material witness for the defence, viz. Emma Wright, who, they stated, was unable to appear in consequence of serious injuries but recently received in an affray. After come discussion, it was finally determined to send a physician to examine and report upon the physical condition of the absent witness, and Dr. Shapleigh was accordingly agreed upon by District Attorney Mann and defendant's counsel to perform this duty. Upon his return ne was called to the stand, and testified that he had found the witness at a tavern, in Dock street, in bed, suffering from contusions about the head and a cut in the arm; that erysipelas had intervened, and that his opinion it would not be safe to compel her removal to coart. Under this state of facts, the mittion for a continuace was granted, and the 19th of September fixed for the trial. The deceased man Bartrow was a special detective for discovery and arrest of deserters from the United States service, and it was while attempting to arrest that defendant as a deserter that the latter is alleged to have killed him. The case comes here for trial by change of venue, a special act of the Legislature having been passed authorizing it. THE CASE OF WM. H. MITCHELL, INDICTED FOR THE Quarter Sessions—Judge Allison. Quarter Sessions—Judge Allison.

Daniel Jones and Andrew Brady, halling from the State of New York, were convicted of stealing the pocket book of a soldier and $50 in notes. The soldier, Wm. Grakam, testined that, having been wounded in the battler at the Wilderness, he was here on furlough, and one day last week visited the Sanitary Fair, where he met a friend, whom he asked to take a drink at a saloon in the neighborhood. Having paid or the drinks, and his pocket book being in his wounded band, it was suddenly snatched from him by one of the defendants, who passed it to the other and ran. They were both arrested, and the pocket-book recovered.

Judge Allison sentenced both of them to an imprisonment of three years, and said if the law permitted he would impose a sentence for double the period.

A few trifling cases of assault and battery were then tried, and the court adjourned. COAL AT COST EFFECTUAL SYSTEM A most effective and delightful preparation
