

A DIBBE FOR NERAC.

BY FRANCIS MARSH.

What was in that eye, Mr. Nerac?—Oh, the look of the man, the look of the man, the look of the man...

Madame's joy was mingled with surprise on seeing Nerac; embracing her dog, she inquired of her adorer where he had found her.

Some two hundred leagues from here," he replied, "I found her."

From this time forward Nerac was on the list of Madame's visiting acquaintances; and for some months ago, that gentleman would find admission to her salons.

Louis soon observed, however, with considerable interest, that Madame Duhamel was moved from her deceased husband's portrait.

One morning in June, Madame Duhamel announced to Nerac that she intended going to her country residence to pass several months.

At the time of her departure, Madame Duhamel had recourse as before to advertising and handbills, and sincerely bewailed the loss of her dear little pet.

"By the way," said she, "but would you like to have the image of me, even if it is dead?"

"Yes, even to the bridge of Neully," which, to an inhabitant of the Boulevard de Grand, was equivalent to saying "to the end of the world."

Fortunately for Nerac, the lady did not lead him so far in his pursuit. Turning into the Rue de Valenciennes, he called to her greyhound—"Follette, here, Follette!"

neighborhood. Two weeks elapsed, and Madame Duhamel did not return. Her husband, until one day Nerac called upon her, leading Follette by a cord.

"You are a man of business," exclaimed the servant who answered Nerac's ring, and he instantly to acquaint the widow of the fact.
