These pictures were, of course, very much smaller than the eye itself, and it was therefore necessary to devise a method of enlarging them. No very profound knowledge of the effects produced by a combination of lenses was required to point out the means of accomplishing this. I caused one of the rooms to be made totally dark, and an opening to be made in the boards which were nailed over the win. Again the dream doth change. I see again

I thanked God with all my soul when the first faint indication came of returning daylight. The morning sun shone full on the window, and I saw, with inexpressible satisfaction, that the light was far more vivid than on the preceding day. By slow, very slow degrees—for it is not with these enlarged representations as with small ones—the face became more and more defined. FROM DARKNESS TO LIGHT. A Secret Stolen from the Eyes of Death. I had but a few months longer to remain at college when I was sent for, in consequence of the serious illness of my mother.

On reaching home I found that Fanny was grief filled my mind while this likeness of staying there, and during this time we were the murderer crept slowly, but steadily, necessarily a great deal together. The only person whom Fanny had to consult was her aunt, and there was nothing to fear from any objections on her part.

I do not suppose you remember, even if you ever heard, that this aunt of hers was very rich. She had adopted Fanny and her way station, and had returned the same lynther when they were mere children.

My sister came to my bedside as the man left the room. We were always strongly never seen. His conduct was so had at Eton that he was expelled from that school, and so disgusted his aunt that she refused to allow him to live with her, and he was sent to St. Omer to finish his education there. He left St. Omer without giving any reason, and went to Italy, living on the allowance that his aunt made him. In his letters he spoke only of the occupations and amusements of the various courts and cities he visited, and the frequency with which he wrote to his aunt mollified her feelings towards him so far as to induce her to increase his allowance; but she said she had vowed that her whole fortune should go to her niece on her death, and nothing would induce her to break this solemn reso-Eton that he was expelled from that school down the streets of London from morning to night, avoiding no place; however infamous, where there was a chance of finding get it?"

As I was the morning and on the river, and had a long day afterwards for study. As I was leaving chapel one morning a familiar voice said, "Good morning, Mr. Alfred," and a hand was held before me with a letter. I was so surprised that, before I took the letter, I looked at the speaker, and a chill came over me when I saw that it was the groom who waited upon me when I was thome. Telling him to go to my rooms, I went back into the chapel, which was now empty, and opened the letter. It was written by my father; and after exhorting me to bear the painful news he had to give me like a man, he told me briefly that Fanny had disappeared on the previous morning, and that they had been seeking her all night in vain. On reading this letter I rushed to my rooms, threw off my cap and gown, and, within a quarter of an hour was driving homewards. My first question, as I jumped out of the gig and took my father's hand was, "Have you found her?" His answer was in the negative. He told me she had gone out alone before hand her all and had not been seen all and had had not been seen all and had not been seen all and had had had had not been seen all and had had seated myself on a balcony outside the ball-room, from whence I could see all who approached the Countess to pay their respects. I dare say it was close upon midnight when I saw two gentlemen making their way towards the spot where the Countess was seated conversing with the young Archduke Maximilian, and the commander of the Austrian troops. The taller breakfast, as usual, and had not been seen since, though she had been sought for in It may have been a year or more before this that I had taken a great interest in photography, and there was not a picturesque spot about the estate or near it I had not photographed. During my mother's illness it was my chief amusemother's illness it was my chief amusement; and, accompanied by my cousin and a man to carry the apparatus, I had spent whole days in practicing an art which, to me, had all the charm of novelty. Too impatient to regulate my pace by my father's, through a doorway, and disappeared. Little as I heeded who I thrust aside in I called to my groom to come with me, and set off to search those places beyond the limits of the estate which we had liked most. I had searched several of these without success, and had got as far as The Beeches, when I suddenly recollected that there was a place called "Clay Hollow," about two miles distant. This was a very likewise opened into the square; but it was likewise opened into the square; but it was not that by which I had entered, which about two miles distant. This was a very lonely spot, but commanded a beautiful view, and had been a favorite walk of ours since we had discovered it. Wondering why I had not thought of it before, I set out for this place. The pathway, which led into the hollow, wound through furze and broom and came out habing a registration of the square, when suddenly I saw a bright flash at the furtherest corner of the square as though somehold, was a controlled to the square into the square; but it was not that by which I had entered, which was at some distance and surrounded by servants and boatmen. If this had happened but an hour ago, I less, I rushed across the square as fast as I could run towards him. I overtook him as could run towards him. I overtook him as he was leaning over a bridge which crossed one of the canals, looking down at the water. I seized him by the arm with my left hand, and with my right I grasped a handful of his clothes. I could not speak for the moment, so great was my excitement; and just as I was about to raise my voice for help, I felt a sharp pain and a descent through the air, followed by a sensation of extreme cold. After this I was half conscious of a cry that an assassin was in the water, and then I seemed to fall asleep. I have no hesitation whatever in saying that, in all cases where death occurs in broad daylight, and especially when it is caused by similar means, the last object on which the eye rests will be found depicted on the retina after death, and from Darkness may be brought into Light.-London Walking Leaves of Australia. Almost everybody has heard of the walking leaves of Australia. For a long time after the discovery of that island, many people really believed that the leaves of a certain tree which flourished there could walk about the ground. This story arose in this way: Some English sailors landed upon the coast one day, and, after roaming about until they were tired, they sat down under a tree to rest themselves. A puff of wind came along and blew off a shower of leaves, which, after turning over and over in the air, as leaves generally do, finally rested upon the ground.

As it was midsummer, and everything appeared quite green, the circumstance puzzled the sailors considerably. But their surprise was much greater, as you may well suppose, when, after a short time, they saw the leaves creatly appeared to the leaves or a long the same than the s the leaves crawling along the ground to-wards the trunk of the tree. They ran at once for the vessel, without stopping to examine into the matter at all, and set sail from the land where everything seemed bewitched. One of them said he "expected every moment to see the trees set to and dance a jig."

Late explorations of Australia have Late explorations of Australia have taught us that these walking leaves are insects. They live upon the trees. Their bodies are very thin and flat, their wings forming large leaf-like organs. When they are disturbed their legs are folded away under their bodies, leaving the shape exactly like a leaf, with its stem and all complete. They are of a bright green color in plete. They are of a bright green color in the summer, but they gradually change in the fall, with the leaves, into the brown of a frost-bitten vegetation. When shaken from the tree, they lie for a few moments upon the ground as if they were dead, but presently they begin to crawl along towards the tree, which they ascend again. They rarely use their wings, although they are pretty well supplied in this respect. LOTTY AND COUNTY OF PHILADELPHIA.
