The Bridge of Clouds. BY. H W. LONGFELLOW. Burn, O evening hearth, and waken Pleusant visions, as of old ! Though the house by winds be shaken, Sate I keep this room of gold! Ah, no longer wizard Fancy Builds its castles in the air, Luring me by necromancy Up the never ending stair! But, instead, it builds me bridges Over many a dark ravine, Where, beneath the gusty ridges, Cataracts dash and roar unseen. And I cross them, little heading Blast of wind or torrent's roar, As I follow the receding Footsteps that have gone before. Nought avails the imploring gosture, Nought avails the cry of pain! When I touch the flying vesture, 'Tis the gray robe of the rain. Baffied I return, and, leaning O'er the parapets of cloud, Watch the mist that intervening Wrother walley in its shroud. And the sounds of life ascending, And the sounds of the ascending, Faintly, vaguely, meet the ear, Muraur of bells and voices blending, With the rush of waters near. 11 I know what there lies hidden, Every tower and town and farm, And again the land forbidden Reassumes its vanquished charm. Well I know the secret places, And the nests in hedge and tree; At what doors are friendly faces, In what hearts a thought of me. Through the mist and darkness sinking,
Blown by wind and beaten by shower,
Down I fling the thought I'm thinking,
Town I toss this Alpine flower.
[Atlantic for September. Country Rambles-No. 4. BY CITY COUSIN, JR.

[For The Press.]
Armed with a sharp axe and a large basket, we plunge into the intricacies of the swamp in search of pine-knots to use as fire-wood for our night expedition on the water. We return about sunset heavily daden, partake of a slight repast, and get ready to go striking for cels along Shark river. The body of the farm wagon has been removed, and a large scow, which has been carefully cleaned, is placed apon the pair of wheels. It answers the purpose of a wagon body very well. The spears, jack, and pineknots have been carefully placed along the bottom of the boat; the whip is given to Ben and Bill, and we are soon under way for our destination. Of course, we must stop for Uncle John, who has become famous for his expertness in capturing the wriggling fish. He has just come in from a heavy day's work Although he has been down at the salt meadows mowing all day, he determined to accompany us. Now we are in for it. It is just the right kind of a night for our purpose. The stars twinkle joy-ously upon us, and the moon will not be up till ously daybreak. After a short ride we reach the river. The scow is removed and placed in the water. The horses are tisd securely to a pine tree about a quarter of a mile from the shore. Uncle Abraham and Isaac have brought up another scow, called the Little Annie, to accompany us. The fire is started in the jack, and we push off from shore. Now, there is a peculiar pleasure in the business in which we are about engaging. There is something novel in the manner of catching the fish and the time you take to do it. Of course, the water must be clear, the wind very low, and the striking wood of the best quality. It must be a startight night, but no: very bright. Everything, however, seems to favor our purpose. The scow used in the business is about twenty-five feet long and four feet wide. is built with a raised platform on each end, where the striker stands to perform his part of the operation. In the centre of the scow is a stout board. securely fastened, with a large hole in the middle, for the purpose of receiving the jack or jack o'-lantern. This is composed of semi-circular pieces of wrought iron, similar to a fire-grate, fastened upon a stout pole, about six feet high. This pole is inserted in the centre of the boat, in a place fitted up ex-pressly for its reception. When the fire is started the least motion of the boat fans it into a fiame, and, as it is built and composed of pine knots, you can imagine what a large and bright light is obtained. The spear used in the capture of the fish is made of tempered steel. It is shaped something similar to a harpoon, only with a single straight tooth between the triangular prongs; or it might best be understood by taking a common pitchfork, say with five teeth, with this exception, that the end of the centre tooth is shaped like an isosceles tri-angle, and the ends of the outer teeth are shaped like a right angle triangle, with the points turning inwards to the plain teeth. Of course, being made of steel, it is very springy, and when the victim is tween the prongs. The handle of the spear is a smooth. narrow pole, from 15 to 20 feet long. The pine knots having been stowed away in a dry place, we are reminded that we must pile on the wood and keep the fire bright. We get the scoop ready for bailing; we gather sea-weed and place it all around the seat, beneath our jack, to keep it from getting on fire by the live coals which are constantly dropping; we seize our spears and use them for poles to push our boat along to the selling grounds. The dark-green hilly banks look darker than ever by the glare of our fire. Schools of small fish, attracted by the light, follow in our wake. "Put on more wood," shouts Uncle John; "Abraham, steer a little more to the right," cries Uncle Isaac; "Hold on-h-o-l-d on!" "There goes a big fellow; Charley, do you see him?" Of course we don't see him, for we have not yet got accustomed to the light, and, as we have weak eyes, we find it a difficult matter to peer into the darkness that surrounds us. We still keep on our course, occasionally striking at something which we suppose to be an eel, but which, when brought to the surface, turns out to be a hard crab or a piece of and think our expedition is a failure, when low.

stealthy sounds are heard of "Hold on!" "Get ready." "Now for it." We make a plunga with our spear in the direction indicated, and soon deposit a fine, fat fellow in the bottom of the boat. How it runs and twists itself from one end of the scow to the other, and finally buries itself among the pine knots! On they come, one the finds that with all his efforts he can do but little more than to repair the evil a careless hand has wrought.

I deput know that I shall accomplish much good by fitting up my voice against the well-meant but wasted energy that pours like oil from the vial of reform. Still, it is a satisfaction to the overburdened mind to open the gates and allow the surplus tide to escape; therefore I write.

Glancing through the columns of a religious paper published in an Eastern State, my eyes are arrested at the commencement of an article coming from a practice land, away off in Iowa." Now, in the course of my travels having halted and pitched my tent in this growing State, the very title of this piece has a savor of interest to me. I peruse it, and it is the old story often told. A letter from a colporative to an article and on a one-eyed horse; the log house poorly that cheed on a one-eyed horse; the log house poorly that cheed and provided and the college of the sewage of Banbury into the Cherwell has been complained of by a miller who is likely to die the remains there, and whose wife and family have been nearly poisoned by the perilous and unsave been the poisoned by the perilous and unsave been caphalance. Ship W mounted on a one-eyed horse; the log house poorly thatched, with its ladder in one corner and six powerty-stricken children in another; no newspapers, no tracts, no books, save a well-thumbed Bible, and Pilgrim's Progress. All these are familiar, though sometimes the goodwork of John Bunyan is changed for Webster's Dictionary, which looks better in print, and once, originally being prominent in the writer's organization, "Gonsit on the Horse" was added to the pioneer library.

Now, it has been my lot to pass through certain portions of the West, and though I do not dispute the whole of this picture, I can say that I have never seen it verified. These men doubtless write sincerely, but they are giving our Eastern brethren a one-sided view of us as a people. We are held up as an ignorant, coarse-lived, ague-smitten set, who are constantly stretching out our hands for charity toward the rising of the sun. My dear friends, don't be entirely deceived! A band of earnest ploneers, the Western States are marching onward, all obstacles crumbling beare marching onward, all obstacles crumbling before their mighty ranks. Only wait a little, and you shall see our far-reaching strides in the race of Science, Agriculture, and Literature. We shall overtake those who have started long before us. Am I enthusiastic? I cannot be otherwise, when I join the past with the present, and stretch the hand of Faith toward the chain of our future destiny, to draw its links down to the record already written.

I have not denied our need of help. We lift up our eyes, and behold the dawning of the day is here. The harvest-fields are white, and every laborer has a share in the great work that is to yield to us more of good than we can now estimate, if we lift the burdens with ready hands and unerring nerves. If a great deal of missionary labor is to be extracted from one life, there must be an equal amount of are marching onward, all obstacles orumbing be-fore their mighty ranks.
