Song. WILT THOU NEVER, NEVER CHANGE? (For The Press.)

Wilt thou never, never change-Wilt thou love as well to-morrow-Wilt the moments never come, When I'll think of thee with sorrow ?

Wilt thou never, never change-Wilt thou wander from me never-Will thy smile be always mine, And thy heart be mine forever? CHORUS-Wilt thou never, never change-

Wilt thou wander from me never-Will thy smile be always mine, And thy heart be mine forevor?

Wilt thou never, never change-Can I trust the vows thou'rt making? Ah ! my heart, though happy now, Without thee would soon be breaking. Without thee wonth soon be break I have plodged thee all I have— I will play the truant never— Will thy smile be always mine, And thy heart be mine forever !

CHORUS-Wilt thou never, never change-Wilt thou wander from me never-Will thy smile be always mine, And thy heart be mine forever?

Wilt thou never, never change, Will thou haver, never change, In youth, in age, in sorrow? When old Time has ploughed my cheek Will this bouty-maring furrow-Will thy hand be near to help-Will thy heart forsake me never-Will thy smile be always mine, And thy love be mine forever? CHORUS-Wilt thou never, never changewilthou wander from me never-Will thy smile be always mine, And thy love be mine forever?

THE CITY.

POLITICAL SHADOWS.

Every night on Chestnut street, punctual to a certain hour, a crowd of hatless small boys-gamin, raif, vagrants, little claqueurs, and other such innocent rubbish, whom may Heaven preserve-assemble opposite the Democratic headquarters and take secured seats on the curbstones or the State House steps. As the citizen passes near, he sees this congregation of elves looking up toward the moon, as if in search of an eclipse or a man with horns. This mysterious wonder is at last explained by a scatter. ing chorus of guttural voices, all along the line. It is strange what volumes of sound are contained in these delicate but wonderful vessels ; and it shows what a fearful and astonishing contrivance of na-ture is the genus small-boy. A shout, such as news. boys deliver when they gather together in their majesty, directs the eye upward to a piece of canvas, on which the shadow of the youthful McClellan is passing under the magic of a lantern. By-and-by the flow of pedestrians in passage stops in a flood, and the cry goes up again, "Hooray for McClolling !" The exhibition is a tempting one to those who cannot put their hands in their pockets without finding a hole; for the regular "entertainments" hardly contain as much amusement as is thus pro-vided, in vagrant phrase, "free gratis for nothing," <text><text><text> by the benevolent men of the Bohomian party, who have gone to an infinite expense or credit to get up

Mobile, is now on the dock for repairs, having been injured in striking the late rebel ram Tennessee, now belonging to our navy. MISCELLANEOUS.

LOCKING CAR DOORS. Since the terrible misfortune on the Pennsylvania Railroad, by which a number of lives were lost, locks have been arranged on the cars which open from the inside only. The object of having the car doors locked is to prevent way passengers from getting into the cars with through passengers, which would thereby render it necessary for tickets to be shown by all the passengers at every station, thereby giving an extra amount of trouble to both passen-gers and conductors. BY HENRY P. WOLBERT,

Thus these cheerful shadows pass and repass through the night, and young McClellan following Washington in a suspicious manner, strides over the dreams of the vagrant. It was, indeed, a happy ldea of these who direct the mummeries of the warlike party devoted to peace, to familiarize the popular mind with General McClellan by means of a lantern. But, for want of enterprise, other pictures no less entortaining would pass in the glamour of magic. For instance, the retreat from the Chickabominy, Little Mac asleep in the gun-boat, Little Mac following James Buchanan in a dissolving view, by which it would hardly be impossi-ble to tell James McClellan form Little Buchanan. As it is, Little Mac becomes more and more familiar. His features will not stand the test of going through a pictorial mill. Last night he was a cross between a mild puglilist and a West Point cadet.
