The Forcign Policy of the United States. Foreign intervention has been from the first the hope of the rebellion. The leaders of the South would never have dared this war had they not believed that European recognition would establish the independence of the Confederacy. This was for at once? years the phantom that dismayed the Union. In the beginning of the war, when the energy of the South astonished the world, when we had no navy, when our army was mismanaged, when our campaigns had no results, when Europe laughed to scorn the idea of the conquest of the South, then the intervention of France or England was a perpetual threat. It was more ; it was a danger. The policy of interference was discussed in the Imperial Cabinet ; rebel agents had secret interviews with French Ministers. Every steamer brought rumors that our enemies were successful, and we sent back the news of the rout of Bull Run and the disastrous campaign of the Peninsula with anxety and fear. The apparent failure of the war for the Union invited interference, and was the main argument of our foes. What could Mr. DAY-TON say at the Tuilleries or Mr. ADAMS at the Court of St. James ? Not that we were crushing the rebellion, but that we would crush it. Our success was merely a prophecy, almost universally disbelieved. Still, the European Governments did not interfere. What prevented intervention? It was not slavery alone, for it is known that to gain England and France for allies the Confederacy would have nominally abolished slavery. It was not merely the danger of interference, for the powerful coalition of England, France, and the Confederacy, if it had been established in 1862, would have made the magnificent campaigns of 1864 impossible. Intervention was prevented by the masterly foreign policy of the Government of the United States-a policy never excelled in prudence, firmness, and fidelity to the American ides, and vindicated so thoroughly by its success, and the present proud and almost domineering attitude of the Union, that to question its wisdom is equivalent to the denial of our triumph.

It was perhaps more from a desire to assert the theory of the authority of Congress than from dissatisfaction with our present foreign relations that the House of Representatives has passed resolutions which virtually affirm that the United States can have no foreign policy that Congress has not predetermined. We do not believe that such resolutions serve any good purpose. No matter what may be their intention, they are used as instruments to injure the credit of the Administration, in proof of which we cite the important fact that every member of the Opposition voted for them. Nor are these resolutions demanded by any violation of the National precedents by the Executive branch of the Government. The Constitution does not recognize the House of Representatives as a part of the treaty-making power-a power vested exclusively in the President and Senate. The House, as the. popular branch of Congress, may be expected to express the immediate feeling of St. Petersburg, or elsewhere. His first cause we are all, from the President down ship of Ireland, where he won the appro-bation of O'CONNELL. He subsequently "They had learned of the fall of Fort McAllister, but the teamster in the army, earnest in our resolution that the Monroe doctrine shall never be surrendered, we should go to war with NAPOLEON at once. because his bayonets established MAXIMI-LIAN in Mexico. It is significant, too, that while the insjority of Senators are supposed to be decidedly opposed to Mr. SEWARD on important subjects, the Senate has sustained his foreign policy. Mr. SUMNER, who may be yielded the honor of being the leader of the Senate in all questions of foreign policy, has, with the true spirit of a statesman, recognized the necessity of avoiding foreign war, so long as it can be avoided with honor, while we have this great rebellion to combat. The fudgment of the country sustains the policy that has thwarted MASON and SLIDELL, prevented war with Europe, and at the same time kept the honor of the nation stainless, and exalted its power in Christendom. We have the right to assume our peaceful relations with Europe as the results of Mr. SEWARD's policy, for, if it had been either weak or rash, nothing could have prevented foreign interference. Had he shown a disposition to yield the rights of America, they would have been wrested from a hand too feeble to hold them. But what have we yielded ? Nothing but what our treaties exacted : MASON and SLIDELL to England, courtesy to Brazil, and to all Governments justice. The Monroe doctrine has been reaffirmed by Congress, and repeated by Mr. SEWARD in the very as a check upon ministerial extravagance. assurance he gave to France that our fo-Mr. WILLIAMS had reached an advanced reign policy was not to be changed. On the other hand, had he asserted one unjust LOUIS PERRIN, whose life also had far principle, the act would have been emphaexceeded the "three score years and ten" tically resented. For a moment the North the Irish bar." He sat in Parliament from was deceived, and rose as if to resent the wrong. But Mr. SEWARD was not deceived. He did not put a navy on the lakes, and thus break one of the most important stipulations in our compact with Great Britain, but he did establish the passport system, of which no foreign Power can complain. This policy is vindicated by the prompt action of the Canadian authorities, which has already resulted in the .re-arrest of several of the raiders, and more than this, concedes the great principle claimed by, our Government. And everyworn the ermine in Ireland, none was more where we triumph. We fight no French determinedly just, more consistently libeor English armies, but all our forces are ral, or more intuitively honest. concentrated on our domestic enemies. In the government of the world we have our full share, and if foreign intervention be still a danger, it lurks in the dark background, wherein it will finally vanish, unless summoned forth by our own folly. Have we the moral right to criticise on mere grounds of technicality a policy which has had these gigantic triumphs? Can we substitute one safer and more upright? If it is possible, let it be, but it is yet to be revealed. It is not too much to say that to Mr. SEWARD we owe it that we are at neace with the whole world, and are now bringing to an end the greatest war of the century, to the astonishment of Europe, eave to Congress the decision of the and without the interference of her Powers.

There is no time to be lost. Every man should be enrolled; and in order that we should have a just quota, every man who is exempt by reason of age or infirmity should have his name stricken from the enrolment books. By energy and harmony now, by throwing ourselves upon the South in this period of its despair and desolation, we may so utterly crush it before spring that the war will be over. Is it not better to make a sacrifice now of to raise Pennsylvania's quota for this draft.

time and purpose, and thus end this thing Death's Doings Abroad. Within a single week we have heard of

he death of six persons who, more or less, vere celebritics in Europe. These are Mr. DAYTON, American Minister at Paris; CONSTANT MOCQUARD, private Secretary to the Emperor of the French; the Earl picket line. of CARLISLE. lately Viceroy of Ireland; DAVID ROBERTS, the great painter : Louis PERRIN, the Irish judge, and WILLIAM WILLIAMS, M. P. for Lambeth, one of the London metropolitan boroughs. The career of Mr. DAYTON was so lately sketched in this journal that we need not go into its particulars now. Mr. DAYTON might be truly described as "Good without effort, great without a foe," and it has not surprised us to learn that, among the mourning crowd who attended his obsequies on the 6th inst., at the American church in Paris, several Southern gentlemen were noticed. He would not have completed his fifty-seventh year until next February, and his appearance as well as his habits gave every promise of long life. M. MOCQUARD, who died at the more advanced age of 73, commenced his public career over forty years ago in the diplomatic service, under the first NAPOLBON. When the Empire fell, he practiced at the bar for over ten years, until his health broke down, always showing liberal tendencies. The Revolution of 1830 drew him from retirement to office, in which he continued until 1889, when his friendly relations with the BONAPARTE family drew him into the circle of Prince Louis NAPOLEON's friends, and in 1840 he became editor of the Commerce, a Napoleonic journal in Paris. In 1840, on the failure of the Boulogné invasion, he acted as one of LOUIS NAPOLEON'S advocates with marked ability, steadily supported his Presidential aspirations in 1848, and was made 'Chief of the Cabinet on his patron's election. He was deep in the secret and action of the coup d'état, since which time he has acted as NAPOLEON's private Secretary. with the title of Chef de Cabinet. He had considerable ability, having written the Life of Queen HORTENSE, a book called "Nouvelles Causes Célèbres," several dramas, and some poetry. He fully possessed the confidence of his imperial master. The Earl of Carlisle, who was Lord Mon-

PETH when he visited the United States, in 1842, was at once one of the most wealthy and most liberal of the British nobility. After highly distinguishing himself at the University of Oxford, he entered the House of Commons, in which he continued, with little intermission, until he succeeded to the Earldom, on his father's death, in 1848. He was a fluent speaker, but his matter was superior to his manner, which was pedantic and artificial.
