FOUR CENTS. cther day, to give the Government helf of everything he owned in the world, to close his store, and to devote his while time, without charge, to hospital duty, if thereby he chuld insure the soccess or promote the good of the cause. Another old gentleman, living in the country, in renewing his subscription to the White, writes that, but for his infirm health, which confines him to the house, he would, in spite of his seventy winters, shoulder his musket and fight tinder the black fing rather than submit to be ruled by the Yankers. Still subther old gentleman, writing from the country, implores Congress to do its duty and lay on the taxes. The people, he declares, are willing to be taxed sny amount, to endure any privation, in order to benefit the cause.

This is the true splitt of patriotism—the genuine, unselfish love of country. Were all our people actuated by motiver as strent and principles as noble as there white haires sires, the subcess of the cause would not admit of a moment's doubt—the great stake would virtually be won, and our independence assure as the sun in heaven. And if the old meable moved by impulses to excited, certainly the young men ought not to be backward. Nor are they. (From the Richmond Dispatch, Feb. 25.1

The enemy captured a portion of our picket line near Hatcher's Run on Tuesday afternoon, but the line was recaptured by our troops on Wednesday morning.

We learn from the Express that one day last week, in the neighborhood of Burwell's Bay, a small party of Confecerate scouts under command of Sergeant Shedburne, assisted by a few of the Independent Signal Corps, under command of Lieut. Woodley, sitacked two hundred and fifty of the enemy, tilling and wounding a number, and putting the others to fight. Sixteen dead Yankess were found on the read side and in Smithfield.

It was quiet along the lines yesterday. SPY AND GUERRILLERO,

THE EMPLOYMENT OF REGRO TROOPS.

[From the Richmond Exeminer, Reb. 25 ]

The question of employing negroes in the army is, by no means, set at rest by the Senate majority of one. The debates having been secret, the public can have no knowledge of the reasons and arguments urged on either side. Undoubtedly the arming of negroes, whether as slaves or not, is a very serious step; justifies earnest deliberation, and accounts for honest differences of opinion. It is a great thing which General Leeman 100 and directly opened the Section of the leader to whom we already owe so much, and on whose shoulders we rest so great a responsibility for the of naval power to be wielded by the Governments of Great Britain and the United States as judged A SPLENDID ASSOSTMENT OF Betimating one well to each lot (one hundred wells, although there is room for three hundred) at the very moderate average of ten barrele each, would make a MISCELLANEOUS AND LAW The development proves highly creditable to Mr. Welles, our Secretary of the Navy. Mr. Blow said:
At this day England is turning out from her immease private yards on the Clyde, the Thames, the Microsy, the Tees, the Tyne, and West, five hundred thousand tons of iron a crhant vestels per annum. She is to day dunlicating the entire tonnage of our navy annually vate yards naveable for the occam, and this day her priprivate establishments together more than the priprivate establishments together more than the priprivate establishments together more than the well for un to remember; but it is not the only remarks ble truth which has been brought to our attention by the very able and interesting report of Chief Engineer J. W. King, United States Navy, and embodied in and published with the last annual report of the Secretary of the Navy Mr. King was sent last summer by the Department to exemine the dock yards and iron-clad establishments in England and France, and I am glad to be able to say that every facility was ext-nace to him lay the Governments of those countries in the performance of his duties. We learn from Mr. King's report the fact that England is far ahead of us in her ability to construct ocean GLOVES, TRAVELLING SHIETS ten dollars per product to the Company, at $13.59. "the land on which, last year, you raised such large crops, will be ploughed this man the discount of the legislation of Congress is not yes finally matured, but no doubt is left on the subject of doubled taxation. This may be assumed as settled; and another fact may also be regarded as almost determited, namely; that the currency is not to be increased in quantity. These, two facts are of great significance when taken together. If the currency remains at its present imited amount, and if the Confederate taxes are to be doubled, then money must, of necessity, grow scarce and hard to get. The taxes will be felt with great severity; money will be in urgent demand; and a change must take place in the present rate of prices.

It is calculated that three hundred millions of dollars will be collected in taxes, much the larger portion of which sum will be payable in currency, the rest in four, per cent. bonds. Now, at the present rate of prices, it is found, in actual experience, that money is scarce in the banks, in the treasury, and in all places of usual deposit, with a circulation outstanding of five hundred millions of dollars. But if a demand for two hundred millions or more be created for this currency. In addition to the existing demand resulting from the general transactions of scelety, an enhanced value must be imparted to the currency, and the prices of the great mass of cummodities which are the subjects of daily perchase and sale, must be rateably affected.

Various extraneous causes may operate to miderate the direct effect of the laws of supply and demand upon this currency. In the presence of the great the direct effect of the laws of supply and demand upon this currency. Killitary reverses may greatly discredit Confederate money. Invasion may prevent the collection of taxes in considerable areas of territory now lished to the excise. It is impossible to estimate the effect of the laws of supply and demand upon this currency. Military reverses may greatly discredit Confederate money in the season terri allowing three hundred working days to the year, this would make the Compa-ny's annual net receipts, from the Stew-TATIONERY & BLANK BOOKS. And every description of "Settle Section of the leader to whom we already owe so much, and on whose shoulders we rest so great a responsibility for the future, could induce, or rather coerce, this people. Send this samy to consent to so essential an innovation. But still the question recurs, can we hope to fight successfully through a long war without using the black population? Evidently Gen. Lee thinks not, because at the same moment that he makes new efforts to recall the absentees and deserters to their posts he also urgently demands that Congress and the several States pass at once such legislation as will enable him to fill his ranks with negro troops. On this point of military necessity there are few in the Confederacy who would not defer to the judgment of the General.

There is another very material consideration. If we arm negroes, can they be made serviceable soliders? This journal has heretofore opposed the whole project upen the last-named ground, and has not onanged its opinion. Yet General Lee has, on this question also, very decidedly expressed a different judgment in his letter to a member of Congress. And this is another question purely military, upon which, therefore, the whole country will be disposed to acquiesce silently in the opinion of the commander who undertakes to use that species of force estimately for our defence. There are many other considerations, which are not military, but moral, political, and social, relating to the future of the black race as well as of the white, all of which oppose themselves strongly to the revolutionary measure now recommended. On these General Lee cannot be admitted as an authority without appeal; indeed, his earnestness in providing that "those who are employed should be freed," and "that it would be neither just nor wise to require them to serve as slaves," suggests a doubt whether he is what used to be called a "good Southerner" that is, whether he is thoroughly satisfied of the justice and beneficence of negro slavery as a sound, permanent basis of our national polity. It is in vain to say that the money will be paid from the Treasury, for war expensitures, as fast as it is received into it. It must of neceshity remain, for months, in transitu between the pockets of taxpayers and the pockets of public creditors. The process of collecting in the interior and transmitting to the public depositaries, cannot be performed in less than an average of six months, for the whole counitry. The effect of withdrawing nearly one-half of the present outstanding currency from circulation for six months can only be to enhance the value of the three hundred millions remaining in circulation, and making money, already scarce, still scarcer it is thought singular that, with five hundred millions of treasury notes now circulating in the community, money should yet the scarce. But prices being fifty times as high as they were in old times, each claizen must have fifty times as much money in his pocket as formerly sufficed; so that a circulation of five hundred millions in the present currency is only equivalent to a circulation of tre millions before the war.

All know that ten millions before the war.

All know that ten millions to deving a tax upon the inhabitants of that territory of two fifths of the whole circulation. Or four millions of dollars? Every sheriff in able land, would have been a usurer; the people would have had to part with half their property to raise their taxes; money would have commanded an exorbitant price; that is to say, property would have saired the people in the face.

However men have And for sale by the proprietors, property, the limitation of the circulation to its present amount, and the collection of double taxes, chiefly in currency, must soon awaken the people with electric abruptness to the value of Cenisderale money. What fortune will attend our arms in the field cannot be satisficated with certainty. But it is rational to presume that six or seven hundred thousand able-bodied white men in the Confederacy do not intend to permit he small armies of Yankees and negroes which now pollute their soil to conquer and subdue them. The chances are, one would think, nine to one-timal be ninety nine to one-that the South will not consent to pass under the yoke. Such a dishonor, it may be safely pronounced, is neither probable nor possible it is not a violent presumption to suppose that the brave men of our country will raily to the Southern standard, and issai the fate of the few thousand invaders who have intruded upon their soil.

Galculating upon such a reasonable contingency, it is fair to conclude that the collection of about two hundred millions of taxes in Confederated extract will materially affect the value of the contingency, it is fair to conclude that the collection of about two hundred millions of axes in Gonfederated extract will materially affect the value of the contingency will so diminish also provided and prover.

As to the two first objections, the only answer that can be made is, that General Lee is of a different opinion: he thinks he can make efficient soldiers of negroes, and he thinks the time has come when it is necessary to take and use them. It is one thing to be quite converted to his opinion, and another to acquiesce in his decision. As to those other and larger considerations, which do not depend upon military necessity, nor on the present exigency, but go down to the formdations of society and the natural relation of races, those Senators who hold that it would be a cruel injury, both to white and black, to sever their present relation of master and slave; that to make "freedom? a reward for service, is at war with the first principles of this relation, and is the beginning of abolition, and that abolition means the abandonment of the black race to inevitable destruction upon this continent, those Senators are undoubtedly right. This is the true Southern principle, and the only righteous principle. But what then? What good will our principle do if the Yankees come in over us? Will there be any comfort in going down to perdition carrying our principle with us intact? The principle of slavery is a sound one, but is the odar to us that trather than give it up we would be slaver ourselves? Slavery, like the Sabbath, was made for HAVING SUCCERDED posit the receipts of collectors.

It is not probable, provided no positive disaster occurs in the field, and no material change ensues in the military situation, that Confederate money will depreciate in value in the face of a now restricted money market, of a limited sirculation, and of an impending tax which will impart a new demand for money to the extent of probably two hundred millions of dollars. The banks are already throwing out seper offered for discount, from the mere want of currency. Deposits have diminished, and maturing notes are renewed because of this very same reason. This extraordinary demand for currency has already seriously affected the price of bonds of every class, and both the fifteen-million loan and the non-taxable six per cent, bonds, which are the most desirable funds on the market, fail to command their former prices by considerable margins.

The result of this scarcity of currency must finally and speedily be, if no untoward military event occur, to increase the purchasing power of this paper, to diminish the cost of lying. Happy will such a consummation be for the classes who live on fixed incomes, for all non-producers, and for the community at large.
