DRAFT.

Let each ward's committee see, as its very first duty, that it shall furnish to the provost marshal five or six volunteers. That will relieve the district provost marshal occupied in receiving about twenty-five men a day. In that case the drafted men will not be called for, and the business of recruiting it divides and overcomes; it will be sustained by the Government. But there is no foundation for a report now circulated, that, without such assistance and general action, the Government will wait thirty days.

The jury rendered a verdict in accordance with the facts stated, and Miller was committed to stand trial.

THE CASE OF WM. WALTER.

Coroner Taylor yesterday concluded an inquest in the case of William Walker, 68 years of age, and married, who came to his death in a drunken brawl on Tuesday evening, 28th February, at the saloon of Mr. Weiss, opposite the United States hospital, at Chestnut Hill. The evidence brought out yesterday showed that the deceased, with Levi Farringer, Frederick Ellwood, and John Blansett, went into the tavern about six o'clock on the evening in question, and after drinking of some oysters, Farringer, one of the party, took some sausage, and wanted Walker to pay for it, which he refused to do. Words ensued, during which Levi Farringer struck Walker, which knocked down several times, and the concussions caused by these falls broke a blood vessel. The blood therefrom formed a clot of blood, which, pressing on the brain, produced death. The following is the most important of the evidence adduced.

Wm. Ely testified that he was a bar-tender at Weiss' tavern: about six o'clock Wm Walker, Frederick Ellwood, and Levi Farringer came in; they called for oysters; Walker paid for them; Farringer said, 'I am hungry, give me a piece of sausage;' I did so; he then fastened on Walker; Walker should pay for it; Walker refused; Walker then walked back from the bar, when Farringer struck at him; could not say whether with his fist or not; saw him strike at him two or three times; no words passed; a stranger interfered and said Walker was an old man; he appeared to ward off the blows of Farringer, understood, said he would pay dearly for it; they then got in a tussel down on the floor; Walker and Farringer; Walker got first on his feet; I was
