From the Special Report to Forney's Press, published December 6th, 1863, and understood to be from the one of an additor of that journal who was sent by Mr. Forney to make a tour of the West Virginia oil region:

"In Tyler county, especially around the county seat, Middleburne, the evidences of oil are very abundant. This is so near our State that one almost imagines he is riding on Peaneylvania farms. The people of Tyler county are an intelligent, busy class, and more enterprising than any of the other counties I have visited. They have taken their own lands in hand, and do not invite the outside world with as much avidity as their more kumble neighbors on the Little Kanawha. As an evitence of their confidence in their own enterprise. I know of one sentleman now living near Listerville who refused fifty thousand dollars for a tract of land not more than eight agrees in extent. He was boring a well at the time, and the neighbors around him were also boring wells. The capitalists of the West, from Ohleago, St. Louis, and Oincinnath, as well as the espitalists from Boston, who came rather late into this new business, are greedily and eagerly endeavoring to supplant the masters of these coveted lands. The oil territory that extends from Middleburne, Tyler county, if the surface indications are borne out, will be the great oil bearing of the conlicent Superintendent already at work for the prompt developerent of the lands, so that an early return may be expected from investments in this Company.
