THE OLD AND THE NEW. The strong heart is majestic in the demerit of its impetuosity...

From the contemplation of this deep-seated grief the stricken mind turns for relief to every source of a healthy and serene consolation.

One fact, at least, should be received as a teaching by the nation. It is that ABRAHAM LINCOLN, though fatal to him, while it has grieved the very soul of the nation...

Let us have a care lest such a calamity should again befall the nation. It matters not whether the means we adopt be advertised to us by Monarchical or Imperial proclivities.

The assassination of ABRAHAM LINCOLN imposes upon this nation the necessity of protecting the life of ANDREW JOHNSON by every means within its power from the hand of a traitor.

That he is fully in accord with the North upon the question of slavery is proved not only by the recent action of his State in decreeing emancipation...

In the midst of our sorrows we must remember that "whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth," and that even our sorest afflictions are some way or other for our benefit.

of reconstruction, to a united North will be added a strong cord of vigorous and influential friends in the South.

National Prudence. Upon the table before us is a letter which appeals to us by "the great influence" which the writer attributes to the editorial columns of this journal.

It is affirmed, and almost universally believed in Europe, that the Plague, or a dreadful epidemic much resembling it, rages in St. Petersburg, and has extended along the valley of the Vistula, between Poland and East Prussia.
