"We have been informed that a family of litter rebels; residing in the city, were poisoned the other day under peculiar circumstances. It seems they had a friend visiting them from the country. On receipt of the news of the assassination of the President the family shut up the house and retired to the back parlor, and had a general jollification, singing and dancing, etc. This the visitor could not stand. A war of words followed; criminations and recriminations; invitations to go home, and replies of 'Plistay as long as I see fit,' and finally the visitor hit upon the expedient of poisoning the whole consern with arsenic. This exhibition contains some of Turner's finest paintings; the "Fighting Temeraire," "Uysees defying Folyphemus," "Eness and Dido," "Orossing the Brook," and many of his Venetian scenes. Most valuable of all his works, however, is a series of drawings exhibiting at once his diligence and the operations of his prolific pencil. These drawings consist of pencil outlines, color sketches, and fuished sopia and water-color drawings. The sepia drawings, like the engravings from Turner's pletures, reveal his wonderful feeling for what artists call effect. The pencil drawings in outline are more or less covered with written memoranda designating local color and certain objects which otherwise would be forgotten by him on painting the scene on canyas. Eaton, two men who live in Warren, discovered gold to a considerable extent mixed with the sand in a stream stunated in that town, called Hurricane Brook, which runs near the westerly slope of Mount Carr. They kept the matter a secret, and, during the winter, secured a title to a large tract of land in the vicinity of the brook and the mountain. Specimens of the gold were submitted to Dr. C. T. Jackson, the eminent geologist of Boston, and he pronounced it genuine. At the present time a large number of men are engaged in washing the sand obtained in the brook, and digging for the preclous metal, and a great excitement prevails in that region in regard to the new mine.

This is the first discovery of gold of any account in this State. A company has been formed to work the mine, and from what has been done, there is evidence to warrant the belief that the enterprise will prove eminently successful. Is used with a great deal of vagueness. We often read of the copper belt, gold belt, silver belt, and others, as if the earth's crust was divided off into regular parallel divisions, and in these, traceable without limit, might be found each of those minerals to the exclusion of the other. We believe that a great mistake is made in such an arrangement, and erroneous, teachings and speculations are the consequences. If any body of the earth's surface can be called a mineral belt it is the elevated western portion of the American continent, but even to that the term appears to be inappropriate.
