Export Duties on Cotton. Though some of the schemes proposed for the payment of the national debt are impracticable and delusive, it is a sober fact that, by wise and prudent management. its burthen may be borne by the abounding wealth of the American people; and that it may, at no very distant period, be extinguished. This assurance is founded upon the present and prospective resources that are available to the Treasury by existing laws. One of our most productive sources of revenue has not yet been touched. The Constitution prohibits Congress from levying export duties. The Southern Confederacy adopted our Constitution almost nerbatim; but one of the very few changes it made was to strike out this prohibition, and thus to authorize export duties on cotton and tobacco. Its financial system was based chiefly on those products. It borrowed a large sum of money in England on bonds payable in cotton, and appropriated the money thus obtained to the purchase of the cannon and munitions of war which slaughtered our brave troops. The cotton in its possession was also used to strengthen its home credit during the contest; and its states in abou: NORTH CAROL School, to obtain from export sary to defray the peace expenditures of their proposed government. Now, since cotton and tobacco did so much to strengthen the rebellion, it is just to make them, if possible, contribute liberally towards the expenses incurred in its suppression. The constitutional provision to which we have referred, may present a serious obstacle to this policy. If so, we should promptly consider the propriety of modifying it. There is no Northern interest that we are aware of that would be likely to suffer seriously from judicious export duties; and since the plantation interests have shown a readiness to authorize them to promote treasonable ends, we see no good reason why they should not be invoked to diminish the burthens of loyal dunes the chief portion of the sum necestaxpayers. Congress has the power of levying internal taxes of every description, and it may thus tax cotton and tobacco as well as all other products. But it has been customarv to observe the spirit as well as the letter of the prohibition of export duties, and therefore a drawback has been allowed upon such taxable domestic products as have actually been exported, equal to the tax paid. It may be that the Constitution would not absolutely require this drawback to be refunded, and, if not, a general tax on cotton and tobacco would yield a revenue on that portion of the crop which is sold abroad as well as that consumed at home. But we do not wish here to discuss this point; we merely desire to direct attention to the Confederacy The export duties imposed on the products of Cuba yield a very considerable sum to the treasury of Spain. The tobacco former country, might be very profitably done on a large scale here. And the success of France in extracting vast sums from tobacco, illustrates the possibilities that open up before the greatest tobacco and cotton producing country in the world. Our cotton crop of 1859-'60 is estimated by the census at about 5,000,000 bales of 400. unds each, or about 2,000,000,000 pounds. The home consumption was about 1,000,000 bales, and the quantity exported was sold for $191,000,000. A shrewd American, who has carefully studied the bearings of the cotton question during the last year, in England, informs us that our British cus. tomers were delighted at the opportunity of developing their own cotton planting interests, afforded by our war; but that the experiments in India and China are complete failures. The Asiatic cotton is not fit to use in competition with ours, and it is only the stimulus of enormously high prices which enabled them to pay the charges of transportation. The great bulk of the cotton now in England is unfit for use. It has no strength and no fibre. When American cotton sold for sixty cents, these inferior qualities sold for thirty; now American cotton sells for thirty cents, and the Indian cotton for six. Thus the superiority of our product is fully demonstrated. The hopes which the rebel leaders founded upon its usefulness were false and foolish; but although cotton has been dethroned as a king, it is in our power to make it a very useful subject. We can levy a large export duty, and still supply the world with a better and cheaper article than can be obtained elsewhere. If foreign nations refuse to pay this export duty, we can manufacture our superior cotton into superior cotton goods, and thus outbid England in one of her greatest specialities in all the markets of the world. This would be a policy more creditable to an enterprising and progressive nation than the export of raw material which, after undergoing the manipulations of skilled industry, and enriching other hands by freights, commissions, duties, charges, and profits, finally reaches American consumers. If we raised but 1,000,000 bales, a tax of ten cents a pound would yield $40,000,000. Making all due allowances for the disorganization of Southern industry, it is quite possible that 3,000,000 bales, or 1,200,000,000 pounds, may be raised in 1866. A similar tax on this crop would yield $120,000,000. If, a few years hence. the crop becomes as large as it was in 1860 (and this is not improbable, as the crop of 1860 was more than double that of 1850), a

The prices of cotton that prevailed during the war, show that a large export duty will not prevent the sale of our superior product. If we can wisely avail ourselves of the peculiar advantages which our favored soil and climate possess, the whole question of national debt, taxation and finance, can be made to assume a new aspect, and the old tradition that the hair of the rabid dog that bites will cure, may find a very agreeable and significant verification in our own land and times.

LETTER FROM "OCCASIONAL." WASHINGTON, June 4, 1865. Ruin and destitution are the twin witnesses of rebel submission. They are more substantial even than the history that is written from "reliable" information, and they promise a state of obedience infinitely more enduring than that which is stimulated by oaths of allegiance. Jeff Davis and the conspirators fought as long as they had a moiety to subsist upon. They maintained their treason a bitter year after they had parted with Hope itself. In the black and bloody indictment filed against them in Heaven's High Chancery, that which will consign them to endless torture is the recorded cruelty with which they sacrificed human life, even their own flesh and blood, to satisfy Ambition and to appease an inappeaseable remorse. The statesman who ponders upon his duty to the present and the future, and toils in the task of reorganizing society from the crumbling fragments of the Rebellion, shudders over a truth so unnatural and so foreign to our former idea of the Southern character. But he cannot escape the conclusion that, however the Chiefs of the Rebellion must be punished for guilt so deliberate, he is compassed by a double obligation as he studies the condition of the Southern people. Very few words will state the plain facts as to them. They are beggared. The soil, exhausted by contending armies, refuses to nourish those who have wounded its fair and heretofore fertile bosom. Their railroads are worn out or destroyed. Their banks are broken and scattered. Their

Even the families of their generals are the beneficiaries of that bountiful almoner. The slaves of vesterday—the freemen of to-day refuse to work even for the best of their late masiers; the oldest family servants. those who had suckled their owners with their milk, or had carried them on their backs, who had rejoiced in their growth to beauty and to strength, and had been their equals in many of the lesser enjoyments of life-even this class have mysteriously disappeared. Liberty came to them as a superior, in whose presence all other masters became contemptible; and the first lesson this liberty taught was, that the freeman owes nothing to a human owner, but much to community, more to country, and everything to God. Wonderful, and as solemn as wonderful, is the truth here stated. I have heard of no exceptions save among the steady Unionists of the South who anticipated emancipation, and made their servants their friends by a magnanimous and voluntary offer of freedom. In many cases the richest planters found themselves deprived of their whole colored colony; in all cases the black man was the soldier or the supporter of the National Union. Faith to truth was first after faith to God. All other ties except those of affection for their own blood, amounted to little; hence their usefulness to our generals during the war. whether as scouts, or spies, or fighting men. tion of the imperial revenues. What is in Major General Howard, to whom the done on a comparatively small scale in the | whole subject of the "Freedmen" has been assigned by President Johnson, and who has devoted himself to his work with religious zeal. But, while the Southern colored people are now caring for themselves, or being cared for, the whites are, as I have said, in a most pitiable predicament. Unaccustomed to labor, they are tco proud to take example by the blacks. who, forced to work before, now go to it freely for their own sakes, and who, while their "owners" were fighting to keep them slaves, occupied themselves by shaping their destinies for the new Evangelism, and by setting apart as much of this world's goods as would enable them to begin anew at the close of the war. But the question recurs, what can be done to lift the mass of the white people of the South out of their present state of destitution and despair? It is in vain to say that as they made their bed so let them lie in it; that they provoked their fate; and that all this is a proper punishment, &c. My philosophy in view of this lamentable picture is, that a population thus crushed and suffering, cannot be a great obstacle in the way of President Johnson's plan of reconstruction or reorganization; nor need Unionists like Holden of North Carolina, Hamilton of Texas, Murphy of Arkansas, fear that in their efforts to bring back their States, free forever of slavery and purged of all treason, they will be check-mated or overrun by those who are now only looking for substantial forgiveness and a generous succor from the most appalling of selfcreated evils. There are vast capabilities in the conquered South; a soil susceptible of any cultivation; and natural products waited for by a hungry world. But these capabilities cannot be made available, this soil cannot be cultivated, these products cannot be some forth without the aid of the rational Government and the aid of the properous people of the free States. I know that, as we face this plain truth, we keenly remember the monstrous perfidy of the slave chiefs and their followers, high and low, of all classes, trades, and professions, (even the clergy themselves,) when, in the

nidst of pride and wealth, they broke their oaths to a just Government, and repudiated over two hundred millions of debts due to the honest people of the North. But even this remembrance must not blind us to another truth equally plain. These suffering millions of whites, however sinful, are nevertheless our relations, if not our friends. I may be told that many of them are still ungrateful, haughty, and even insolent in their feelings towards those who have defeated them. But they have nowhere else to look for help but to us of tax of ten cents per pound would yield the free States. They know it, and we know it as well. It would be as unnatural for them to continue to be indifferent to our continuous generosity as it would be for us to hold back our hands. We did not refuse them help in the midst of war; shall we deny it now when we are at the opening of a long bright day of Peace? There are many ways to meet this new duty of the hour, and there are many reasons why we cannot deny or delay it. To lend the bankrupt and repudiated South our credit may seem to be an impossibility, now, when cash payment is systematised in the free States, at first, as one of the lessons of the rebellion, and at last proved by time and trial to be a permanent and more healthy commercountries; and that thus, in time, other | cial necessity. But the statesman must not be deterred, because the difficulty is of such magnitude. The era in which we move is one of stupendous crises and novelties. The war was on a mighty scale. The victory was over an empire and OCCASIONAL.

loan fell off from thirty millions to one million an a half, there was some disposition to accuse the So-cretary of the Treasury of a mistake in making the terms for the new series less favorable than those which had just proved so acceptable to the financial world. As a rather striking illustration of th progress which our affairs are making, we will ob serve, that this change in terms consisted merely is reserving for the Government the option of paying six per cent. in coin instead of seven and three-tenths in currency-a change which six months ago it would ave seemed the height of folly to regard as disadvantageous for the holder of the security. But it has come about beyond the hope or expectation of any man, that we cannot contemplate the near ap-proach of a day when coin and paper currency shall protect of a tay then the state of preference in favor of the latter.

We are disposed to believe, however, that the wisdom of Mr. McCulloch's course is not to be impugned on the ground of the temporary check to the subscriptions, and that we shall see the final series of these notes taken as rapidly as the best in-terests of the country require. Nobody, we supose, expected that the country could safely go on with such subscriptions as were made under the high pressure of the closing days of the former series. No money market in the world is able to dispose of a loan at the rate of fifteen or twenty millions per day-not to speak of the last and upexampled rush of thirty millions—without a con-vulsion. Disengaged capital does not exist to that extent, and if capital is to be diverted from other hannels or employments, time must be allowed for the operation. The country must have time to distribute and digest these enormous subscriptions which are to a large extent made in anticipation of placing" of the securary; and if the time is not had in one way it will be in another; a solingent money market will in the last resort apply the needed corrective, if nothing else does so.

Mr. McCulloch's change of terms, however, checking the avidity with which the loan was sought, appears to have moderated the subscriptions to the proper degree and in good time. The change did not materially impair the attractions of the loan, for even under the first chill of the new terms the subscriptions to the new series were larger than those made at the corresponding stage in the history of the preceding series. They have increased, moreover, to some extent during the last day or two, un-der circumstances which warrant the belief that with increased ease in the money market this clos-ing series of seven-thirties will move off rapidly and smoothly in the regular process of healthy absorp-tion. Especially with Mr. Jay Cocke's efficient management we need have no question that the remainder of this great national loan will be dis-posed of as quickly as the interests of the Treasury require. Indeed it is impossible to imagine a more attractive investment than the remainder of this loan now offers. The complete re-establishment of he credit of the country, the almost positive cer. tainty that we have come to the end of our running in debt, and that the Government will soon cease to offer its obligations in the market, fix and determine a value which was before floating, and to a certain degree matter of epinion or conjecture. The amount of the debt has stopped short of that point where it would seriously embarrass the resources of the country, and is manageable even with commerce, foreign and domestic, in its present deranged co dition. With the business interests of the country once more in full activity, and with the development of our imperial domain once more fairly in progress what investment will the world offer more secure or remunerative than the securities of the united and prosperous Republic, still in its youthful strength, and advaging proudly and confidently to the fair-cet future that ever brightened before a nation! The following were the quotations for gold on

The collieries about Pottsville are all unworked, the miners still standing out against a reduction of wages. We never knew, says the Miner's Journal a period in the history of the trade when it was more utterly prostrated than at present. It is quite evident that the great reduction in the price of Coal at the last New York auction sales, will require a still larger reduction of wages than the percentage originally proposed, before the trade can recover vitality in Schuylkill county. The demand is seriously affected by the stoppage of many iron works and factories which have been running on Government work. The demand for the works formerly reached ten thousand tons per day. Now it is only two thousand. This state of affairs, or course, adds to the depression.

ANCIENT FINE ARTS.

To the Editor of the New York Herald:
Respecting the relies of porcelain ware found is in Respecting the relies of porcelain ware found is in Indeed and the submations at Heraulaneau, which have been forwarded to the Society of Antiquities in London whereof your correspondent ears the bottle resembling Drake's Planiation Bitters was undoubtedly place; among the rulus by the agent of Dr. Drake, we dest, to state that he is incorrect in every respect. If a had the was found there bearing our lettering, the language of the Ancient Romans was different from the acceptation of the Ancient Romans was different from the acceptation that in Europe and has not been in Italy at all. No doubt Americans carry Plantation Bitters to Lome; but trying to impose upon a society of Antiqual lags and the control of the subme; but trying to impose upon a society of Antiqual lags. the depth americans carry Transition Briters to Lone, but trying to impose upon a society of Antinoarlace in this way seems quite usolers, and we do not be the controlled the jets. It is unpersentary for us to spend though the Europe while we are unable to supply the demand for these celebrated Bitters here. Respectfully, if je2-8t.
