LETTER BAGS,

AT THE MEBCHANTS' EXCHANGE, PHILADELPHIA

a leading German banker, to Jay Cooke, will be read with interest: "Now, I would persuade you to use your infin-ence with the Secretary of the Treasury to open to the public a prospect of the resumption of specie payments. This need not be now, but, perhaps on the let of January, 1866. In my judgment he could resume much earlier, but a Sudden resumption would entail (no doubt) many calamities on the merchants on your side. But the opening of the meter prospect of resumption would strike terror into the souls of those leeches of humanity, the dealers in gold, and the premium on it would fail to the souls of those leeches of humanity, the public, that great baby, would at last see that it had allowed itself to be fooled. I predict, and you will see, that the United States paper money will be at a premium before long, as it ought to be, for its usefulness and conventions. The sensible merchants will soon learn to appreciate it. But when peace is fully restored on your side then will spring up such spe-culations as the world has never seen before. And, notwithstanding your enormous weaking thus the balance of trade to the United States to have foreign capital invested for a permanenog in their securi-ties. Moreover, it would allow of sanding United States bonds over without loss, and securing thus the balance of trade to the United States. For, so long as your cottor does not come regularly to mar-ket in Europe, the remitance of the de worst financiers and baskers (in the continental sense of the term) I know of samy where, without teacily seeing the da-baskers (in the continental sense of the term) is now your securities, and the public here fore, decry your securities, and the public here fore, decry your securities, and the public here refrains from buy by them. But that would so alter if the prospect of specie payments was only at a distance certain. Then you would see how Europeans would bay it?
