The Review To-Day. A large force of the noble defenders of the Union will be reviewed in our streets to-day, and, as their colonels somewhat touchingly say in their advertisements, this may be their last opportunity to meet in a body under arms." Philadelphia has not been wanting in hospitality to our gallant soldiers. Few of the many thousands who have hurried through our limits to face danger and death on the sanguinary fields of the South, or passed home, toil-worn, begrimed with the smoke of battle, and scarred with honorable wounds, have failed to receive from our Cooper Shop and Union Refreshment saloons a substantial welcome. The unflagging zeal with which the patriotic managers of these institutions have prosecuted their labors, has reflected great credit upon the "City of Brotherly Love." It has made the veterans of the most distant States devoutly believe that we had indeed a claim to that exalted title. Steps have been taken here, too to demonstrate the feasibility of giving the maimed soldiers in our hospitals such instruction as would qualify them for useful and honorable positions, despite their disqualification for ordinary labor. This great scheme of practical benevolence deserves to be widely imitated, for it has been shown that a little extra care by competent persons will enable thousands of our heroes who have lost an arm or a leg to become clerks, bookkeepers, telegraphers or sales tomers.

be one of patriotic gratulation. We will crowd the lines of the review more to feast our eyes with a flattering spectacle than with the purpose of benefiting those who will form the procession; and thus the soldiers will add a new item to the large debt of gratitude we already owe them. But a small fraction of the troops contributed by our own vicinity to crush the rebellion will be present, and yet we will see enough to give a vivid impression of the power of the gigantic Republic that, ardently devoted to peaceful pursuits but a few years ago, has since counted her armies by millions. We will see a portion of that force which amazed and awed the world by the celerity with which it mastered all the intricacies of military science; the fortitude with which it endured the rigorous hardships of war; and the bravery with which it confronted the most appalling dangers. We will see thousands of the men who will rank in our future history as the Revolutionary soldiers rank in our past annals. Some of them are literally heroes of a hundred battles, and all have attested their devotion to the country by arduous and hazardous service in the most sanguinary of wars. As we gaze upon them they will give us at once living testimony of the trials and triumphs of the past, and security for the preservation of the Union against all foreign and domestic foes

CARS FOR COLORED PERFORS.—The Dulon Passenger Railway Company has placed on its road cars for the accommodation of colored persons who may desire to ride. This is certainly a step in the right direction, but the company should go so far as to divide the cars equally between whites and blacks, so that those who do not can ride every four or five minutes. Such a course would soon do away with the absurd antagenism to colored persons ean have a car to thenselves every eight or ten minutes, and those who do not can ride every four or five minutes. Such a course would soon do away with the absurd antagenism to colored persons in the horse-cars, which, from some unexplained trascot, does not exité in steam cars. We have an incident in connection with this subject which will be said to relate here. Some days ago a lady of Gormantown, who was about stepping into an Eighthum and Green, saw Stephen Smith, a very respectable and wealthy colored person, on the sidewalk, who was waiting to conductor would not allow him type to make you colored person, on the sidewalk, who was waiting to conductor would not allow him type to make you colored person, on the sidewalk, who was waiting to the cars of the sidewalk, who was waiting to be supplied that the conductor ordered him out. Major FREAS, the independent editor of the Germantown Telegraph, has furnished a rare theme for comment in the above paragraph. The bigot and pharisee may there read a sharp rebuke of their poor hypocrisy. The "Stephen Smith" alluded to is one of the most respectable men of our acquaintance. He has every requisite to citizenship-brains, energy, good charac ter, and a large competency, earned by his own industry; but his face is darker than that of JEFFERSON DAVIS, though we suspect he has a whiter heart. We remember STEPHEN A. SMITH as a voter in Lancaster county, twenty five years ago, and nobody objected to his right. It was taken from him in the days of the false Democracy, and we should be glad to help to restore it to him in the days of the true Democracy. This is the sort of citizen that cannot ride in our city cars, lest he may offend some of our delicate and refined sensibilities. Shame!

THE NEW CONSTITUTION adopted by Marvland was the first to provide specifically that in cases of conflict between State and National authorities, allegiance was due to the latter. She thus set an example which is worthy of imitation; and she deserves great credit for her prompt emancipation of her slaves, and her general conduct through the war. Her history during the last four years, notwithstanding the Secession proclivities of some of her citizens, shows that an old slaveholding Commonwealth may become thoroughly loyal. General Grant at West Point.

HIS RECEPTION THERE-INTERVIEW WITH GEN. General Grant started for West Point on Thursday morning, accompanied by his lady, a portion of his staff, and a few invited guests. After a few hours's sail he arrived there, and was greeted by a large concourse of people. As soon as they saw the deneral they gave the usual demonstrations of de-light and appreciation by cheering and waving of hats and handkerchiefs. At once the General was driven to the residence of General Cullum, Post Superintendent. An adroit flank movement got him here without the crowd knowing the fact. Where he had gone was a mystery, and absence of positive knowledge kept the crewd moving about in a state of very unsettled and unsatisfactory im-

VISIT TO THE EXAMINATION ROOM

After an hour spent at General Unilum's, General Grant visited the Library, where the examinations of the graduating class are in progress. As he came into the examination room, leaning on the arm of General Unilum, there was no less joy, although the manner of showing it was more subdued and diguified. The Visiting Board, clivers, professors and all rose to their feet. The examinations were suspended, and then came a round of introductions and handshakings. Ladles, who made up the bulk of the spectators, came in for introduction, and the secult was a hubbul of female and masculine voices for some time.

After a while order was restored. The ladles fell back to their sears and into Silence. Officers, professors and the Visiting Board became seated. General Grant took a seat by the side of General Unilum, and the examination was resumed. Daring lum, and the examination was resumed. During the time that he remained, which was about half an hour, the General seemed quite attentive to the ex-amination, and no doubt recalled the time when with possible fear and trembling, he had to under-go the catechizing process. CALLING UPON LIBUTENANT GENERAL SCOTT.
Leaving the examination rooms, and jumping into the same carriages bringing him and his party from the wharf, General Grant now was driven to from the wharf, General Grant now was driven to Cozzens' Hotel. It was known that the was coming there. It was known that the object of his coming was to pay his respects to Licutenant General Scott. The old and ever memorable here of Lundy's Lane and Mexico, had been apprised of his coming. The oldest general of the United States—a comparison between the two, it will be remembered, put in writing by General Scott himself on the flylest of a copy of his autobiography presented to General Grant. For the purpose of this interview General Scott put on his uniform coat, and stood on the porch waiting—his figure as tall, as erect, almost, as in his manhood's prime, when he led armies to bloody pattles and victory. The carriages drew up and the party alighted.

hattles and victory. The carriages drew up and the party alighted.

"God bless you! God bless you and preserve you!" said General Scott, taking General Grant by the hand.

"Thank you. I am glad to see you, and to know that you are so well," responded General Grant."

"I ham thankrul you have passed through so many perils safe, and that you have brought the country out of its great peril," continued the venerable Lienterant General.

"Thank you." again responded General Grant.

The orowd on the portico, which began cheering en the first appearance of the carriage, stopped for a moment as the two generals greeted each other, and then resumed their cheers of welcome, rendering insundible the rest of their conversation. General Grant introduced Mrs. Grant, the other ladies of his party, and the members of his staff with him to General Scott, who had a plessant word to say to each. With all his infirmities of age the courtly and gallant graces of the solder chlessian are his still. I was particularly impressed with this at the subsequent introductions of General Grant and partyje his own lady acquaintances, and the number seamed uncention who were present. partylio his own lady acquaintances, and the number seemed unending who were present.

The New York Yacht Club regatta came off on Thursday in New York harbor. The following yachts were eptered:

Schooners.—Calypso, owned by J. H. Bache, of N. York, 1027 tons; Juniata, owned by J. W. Grigg, of Philadelphia. 31.5 tons; Maria, owned by J. W. Grigg, of Philadelphia. 31.5 tons; Maria, owned by Oom. E. A. Stevens, of Hóboten, 231 4 tons; Maria, owned by Vice Commodore W. H. McVickar, of New York, 112.5 tons; Breeze, owned by A. C. Kingsland, Jr., of New York, 25 7 tons; Hazel, owned by J. Van Schalck, and others, of New York, 21.1 tons. Sloogs.—Annie, owned by A. Livingston, and others, of New York, 22.9 tons; Geraidine, Owned by J. S. Dicketson, of Stonington, 55 tons. The yachts were to start for Owns Head, proceed sround the light ship and back again, the New York San thus describes it:

Away for the light ship sped the yachts; their white sails gleaming in the sunghing, while their beautiful hulls left behind them a light track of toam, as the breeze freeshend into a good salting wind for the larger vesselt. On the seaward stretch, the somewhat rough water interfered with the progress of the smaller craft, which did not reach the light ship in time for the judges and those on the Seymour to note their reckoning. The Aunie salted close, passing the light ship at 2:37-50; swiftly followed by the Magle at 2:52.38. The Maris, far to leeward, now wore round, and in a few minutes passed the light ship at solo 21. The return trip inch became exciting. The three yachts soad onward so swiftly with a fresh breeze that the Sayimour could not wait for the other laggards to round the light ship, and accordingly steamed after the leading vessels, passing the other craft, which wasthen nearing the light ship in close order, the Juniats and Breeze in the advance. The engineer of the Saymour more now put on all steam to catch up with the fast-salling vessels before her, but only succeeded in arriving near the bucy, at the S. W. Spit, in time to observe the yachts passed the foll wing order: Maria, Annie, Magle, An

Gerritt Smith on the Rebel Leaders. HIS VIEWS ON THE DISPOSAL TO BE MADE OF THEM—RE IS IN PAVOR OF UNIVERSAL FOR-GIVENESS.

The announcement that Gerritt Smith would lecture on the following subject: "That the Government has neither the legal nor moral right to try the rebels, and that the way to a sure and enduring peace lies not through perfidy and vengeance, but through justice and law," attracted a large audience to Cooper Institute, New York, on Thursday ence to Gooper Institute, New York, on Thursday evening.

Mir. Smith said that, in punishing the rebels, the Government would commit the meanest crime of the age. In opposing the punishment of receis, however, he had no reiserence to those concerned in the seassination of the President. Let them suffer for their infamous and heimous crime. He mannt that the Southern people should not be punished for the crime of rebellion. Not, however, because they have not suffered enough; not because they have not suffered enough; not because they have not suffered enough; not because the saiety of the North requires that they should not be punished. He did not say that the South has not been guilty of treason, for she has coen guilty of the war according to the laws of war, therefore we should not punish her. We had agreed to conduct the war according to the laws of war, therefore we should not punish her we had streated them as belligerents. Instead of punishing them as traitors during the progress of the war, we had treated them as prisoners. From time to time we had exchanged prisoners, and there had been flags of truce for the burial of the dead and other purposes. Our blockading Southern ports shows that we agreed with the enemy to conduct the war according to the rules of war.

The lecturer then read extracts from Vattel Hulism to support his position, and said he only stood where Edward Burke had waen he refused to indict a whole people. Another reason why we should not punish our enemies was that there has been sounch of suffering by the defeated party without additional punishment. At the close of such a war the voice of compassion should prevail. God speaks to the deaturying angel as he speke in behalf of the Jews: "Stay your hand, it is enough." It is held in some quarters that in the intermediate stayes of the civil war we might be governed by the laws of war, and at the incliptent and closing stages we ought not to be governed by those laws. Tuis is a groundless distingtion of manety during a divil or internati iand, while not reaching the dimensions of civil war, the British Government had the legal right to punish the insurgents; still it punished only seven, and not one of those with death. It does not become freedom-loving Americans that the vanquished in a civil war should be held as prisoners. He inquired how his audience would have liked to have had Washington and Franklin punished if they had been vanquished in the Revolution. It is likely that in all future rebellions, nineteen in twenty will be on the side of freedom. What is proper for America to set an example of having punished men for treason? [Cries of "Yes, Yes," "No. no."] Crowned heads will everywhere point to the example set by 18 & 2 precedent, whenever they succeed in crushing a rebellion. It is for America to put it in their power to try men for treason?

In answer to as inquiry, Mr. Smith said he believed the cause of Davis and Lee to be unjust. But, said Mr. Smith, would the tyrants of Europe view the distinction? He was speaking of the example of America on coming ages. Suppose one of the crowned heads of Europe succeeds in subduing a rebellion, would it is any troublefor him to say that his cause was just, and that of his enemy unjust, and go to hanging again? [Laughter and applance.]

his cause was just, and that of his enemy unjust, and go to bangling again? [Laughter and applause.]

The speaker referred to the crime of starying prisoners, for which, he said, we were partly responsible. It proceeded from the pre-stavery spirit, for which the North is a little less responsible than the South. We should be reinctant to punish for that crime, unless we can certainly pass upon the guilty. He continued, and said that the North has profited as much by slavery as the South, and that if there was ever a time on the earth when men should be honest, it is now. It is not for us to affect innocence. The only duty of the North is to place herself by the side of the South, in a common repentance for common sin. [Appleuse.] Just as surely as we go to punishing the South, we shall lose all spirit of repretance. There is no way for a man to feel whole blimesif, like punishing others for shis of which he is himself guilty. There was the assassination of President Linceln. The South did not call for it. If a vote of the Southern people had been taken on that question, it would have been almost unenimous against it.

The speaker continued, and said that the South knew that it had not a friend with more kindly feeling for her than Mr. Linceln. That orime came from the pro-slavery spirit which prompted assassination. Mr. S. repeated his argument as to the responsibility of the North on the subject of slayery. In speaking of reconstruction, he said that we must not punish the South out of revenge, but to provide for the future. For that purpose he would divide up the lands of the South among the poor of the South, and give to the blacks the right to vote. He would deprive some of the rebes of the elective on a term for years, and others forever, the would also repudiate the rebes debt. He because the military power, and that before they are reconstructed Congress should pass laws abolishing slavery in those States. In closins, Mr. Smith paid an eloquent eulogy on Mr. Lincoln. Stoves for Hot Weather.

The Queen of Cooking Stoves.—All the labor of man is for his mouth—says Solomon. What the wisest of men taught nearly three thousand years ago, is true to-day. This uncessing, universal demand for food makes the Art of Cookery one of the most important needs of humanity, and one of the best auxiliaries of civilization. For these reasons we give, in the Lady's Book, prominence to "Re ceints for Cookery." We would awaken public attention to this subject. and make the knowledge of Domestic Science branch of education in our Schools for Young Le dies. circular, if not able to call and see the curious and complete invention which consumes its own gas, makes no dust, economizes fuel, and has conveniences for every kind of cooking. We would also call at-tention, in this connexion, to the popular Laundry Stove of Mr. Spear's invention, as a most excellent arrangement for the use of private families; as by its use washing and ironing can be done with less than one half the ordinary amount of fuel, and with infinitely less discomfort, from the fact that the stove is used with perfect case outside the kitchen, where it cannot possibly affect the temperature of the house. No house is complete without being supplied with one of these celebrated Laundry toves.—From Godey's Lady's Book for June, 1865. Some of the victims of misplaced confidence in the rebel cotton loan, in the English market, are the rebel cotton loan in the English market are worrying themselves about getting their money back. A writer in the London wine thinks the Tideral Government should, in some way, have the redemption of the bond, which, considering that the object for which the bad were issued was the destruction of the Government, is refreshingly cool! Nevertheless, this is perfectly natural, and fairly illustrates British intelligence, and the British in land the British is the content of continued that the second content of the content of t ish ides of equity. Having lent the rebest the de-gree of aid they believed would suffice to overthrow the Government and establish a stave Confederacy, and the attempt having falled atterly, and entailed a loss of everything, British supidity begins to show itself in the abourd idea our Government should interpose so as to enable British capitalists to get their money back. In this is displayed the same ignorance and mendacity that lay at the bottom of the belief that the rebellion would not be put down.

The legal controversy on the subject is interesting from the opposite construc tions placed upon the letter of the act. The lan guage of section 90 of the Internal Revenue act is "that all brokers and bankers doing business as brokers shall be subject to pay the following dutle, and rates of duty: * * * Upon all sales and and rates of duty: * * * Upon all sales and contracts for sales of stocks and bonds, one-twentieth of one per centum on the amount of such sales and of all contracts for such sales." In this of all contracts for such sales." In this no excep-tion is made in favor of brokers acting for them-The latest advices from India indicate the progress of the revulsion in the cotton trade there, consequent upon the termination of the war in the United States. The large house of Cama & Son had failed, with liabilities estimated to exceed three millions sterling—chiefly, it is believed, through cotton operations based upon the theory of a longer continuance of the war here. The effect of this failure has yet to be felt in England and Ohius, as well as India, the firm having no less than six branch establishments. The Africa brings intelligence of the failure of several other old Bombay houses-that of Woodhouse, Kenrick, & Co. among them. The recent rise of about a penny per pound in the Liverpool market will doubtless improve the settlements which the bankrupt cotton houses may be able to make with their creditors; but the latter cannot fall to suffer severely, and it is stated that the new joint stock banks and financial institutions n England will be the heaviest losers of all.

To prove the genuineness of the apprehensions of a rupture of peaceful relations between the United States and France, which prevailed in the latter when the news of the Mexican excitement here reached Europe, it is only necessary to say that con-siderable orders for cotton were rapidly transmitted rom France to England. The following comparison of the public debt, evenue, and expenditure per head of the population in the principal nations of the world, is not without interest at the present time:

Boston Hoot and Shoe Markets, June 8.

The Shoe and Leather Reporter says:
There is a fair trade doing in orders from New York and Philadelphia as well as from Western merchants. A few buyers from St. Lonis and other ing as yet. From present appearances trade will open early, and the market be thronged with buyers by the last of this month. As prices of leather are getting easier it feeling that the present must be a good time to make up goods. Prices now afferm, and stocks of seasonable goods small. We look for considerable Southern trade in addition to the regular demand from the West during the coming season.
