FRIDAY, AUGUST 25, 1865. A Word to the Jews. To the Editor of the Press:
Sin: In the Sunday Dispatch, of the 13th inst.,
I find a very well-written article—excepting its nervous irritability—upon the Jews. The writer is evidently one of the sons of Abraham, and extremely anxious for their good name. He begins by a careful enumeration of their trials, and a very fair statement of the pa-tience with which they have been endured, and then goes on to find fault with the way in which their reputation is handled by the Gentile world; and among other quotations and comments makes the following:

comments makes the following:

"Again: In The Press of 5th August, the correspondent signing himself "R. St. James," who has been contributing articles about Texas, finds it necessary to adorn his tale with a siap at the Jew. 'The Jew' he says, with his Cheap John store, his pedlar's pack, his knavery; and his "monish," is in every city and on every road, doing his share of lying and of cheating the world, while waiting for his destiny to be fulfilled and the tribes to return to Jerusalem.' It is true, the writer does not spare the Yankee, but he does not give the Yankee's religion. Why, then, should he give that of the Jews? It was totally unnecessary." Of this I beg a line. For the Jews, as the Of this I beg a line. For the Jews, as the first chosen "Church of God"—as "the natural vine"—as a people yet "to be gathered," because they are yet "to believe"—the writer of Texas papers entertains a deep respect. He studies their strange history with great in-terest, and looks forward to their ultimate con-version and restoration with unwavering missive endurance and long-taxed patience, the Jews would rise first to his tongue, or flow first from his pen. But unfortunately every people, and the Jews among the rest, have a double-sided shield about which the world

The pedling, trafficking Jew, that, with his Cheap John store, or his pack, is found "in every city and on every road" of a new counevery city and on every road " of a new country, as an individual or a class, has a reputation for "lying and cheating," as truthful and as well established as has his nation, or perhaps himself, for patience and long-suffering; and nobody has the slightest right to find fault with either the one or the other being mentioned until they can be proved to be mentioned until they can be proved to be false. That such are the characters of the ped-ling portions of the Jews, is certainly no fault of one who mentions the fact. Nor does a writer suppose himself responsible for the religion of every body of whom he speaks a kind word, nor abusing the religion of those of whom he utters an unpalatable truth. The writer of Texas papers, in one of them, spoke of the praiseworthy exertions of the old Monks to Christianize the Indians; and, again, of a sentiment of honor among rowdies and murderers. But he still begs leave to insist that he is himself neither a Jesuit, a Romanist, a rowdy, nor a murderer, nor a lover of any of them as such. And that, though he did of one who mentions the fact. Nor does a any of them as such. And that, though he did "not spare the Yankees," he is himself a Yankee and nothing else. But not being tenderfooted, he wrote of Monks and murderers, Jews and Yanks, exactly as he found them to be and to have been in the country of which he was writing. He spoke of the Jew not for the Jew's sake, nor the Yankee for the Yankee's sake, at all; but simply because it was as necessary to a truthful description of the inhabitants of Texas as it was to speak of the sugar, cotton, and corn, and the cattle and sheep, when describing its productions. An honest man treads squarely wherever he travels, and leaves the corns to take care of themselves. Số far as to hitting the religion of either the Jews or the Yankees of Texas "a slap," he did nothing of the kind; for, so far as he can judge, after a long acquaintance, neither of them have enough to brag over or quarrel about.

If "lying and cheating" is the religion of the Sons of Abraham, then he must plead guilty. But he has never supposed it, and does not now; and surely no reader of the Old Testing. tament will, for a moment, full into the error of supposing that simply "waiting for destiny to be fulfilled" is the religion of the pious Jew; and if not, then the fault-finding criticism in the Dispatch is "totally unnecessary."
R. St. James.
