to be, know very little about the wantsôt this city, we shall not now stop to ask, but will merely point out the evils, and trust that a remedy may exist somewhere for them. In the first place, most of the streets of Phi-ladelphia are not fit to drive in, Many of them are in such a state that a light wagon cannot be safely driven along them at any faster gait than a walk. According to the charters of these companies they are bound to keep the streets occupied by them in good condition. But, let any one drive along Spruce street, from Third to Fourth, along Market or Callow-hill streets, almost anywhere, and he will con-vince himself that either this provision was never made, or it has passed into a dead let-ter. These are only instances which happen at this moment to come into mind; all over the eity there are holes and rough places inju-rious to horses and dangerous for wagons. The stones between the tails are, as a general thing, too large, and they become so smooth from constant friction that many horses find great difficulty in travelling, and slip about in a manner painful to see. That part of the streets on either side of the railways is almost or quite neglected. Sufficient care is not taken to make a good road-bed at first, and no attention is given to keeping up the needful repairs. Another very scrious evil is the tilting up taken to make a good road-bed at first, and no attention is given to keeping up the needful repairs. Another very serious evil is the tilting np of the iron plates laid down over the wide gutters. These are often allowed to be dis-placed for days together, to the great danger of horses and wagons. The cardrivers and conductors seem wholly unconcerned about this matter, passing the crossing either with-out noticing the displaced plates, or without thinking it worth the trouble to lay them in position again.

out noticing the displaced plates, or without thinking it worth the trouble to lay them in position again. Last winter a citizen lost his life, by his car-riage being upset over a heap of frozen dirt, at Fourth and Walnut streets. The railway company could have afforded, and should have been compelled, to cart away this dirt, instead of mercly shovelling it out of their track, so as to allow their cars to run. It would be interesting to know whether any one was ever made responsible for this sad re-sult of selfishness and criminal neglect. The driver and conductor of a railway car may stop the car across any street, in defi-ance of law; they may stop and wait for fares as long as they like, anywhere, no matter at what inconvenience to persons driving ; they may go as fast as their horses are able, and compel every one to either yield them the road, drive faster, or be run into ; or, they may go as site step thores. May put up their fare, at will, as high as they think their own interest will warrant. They may at any time decline to exchange with any or all of the other companies. For neither of these things is there any remedy for the public, ex-cept to decline using the cars. Do net our laws need remodelling in regard to the responsibilities of these corporations? They ought to be the servants of the public, and not their masters. Those who ride in the cars have their rights as well as those who fur-nish the transportation. And those also have rights who keep carriages of their own, wheth-er for pleasure or of necessity. They pay taxes which should entitle them to good streets, It is the trans principle of our insti-tutions to seek the greatest good of the great-est number, and not to allow any individual or association to pursue their own profit and in-terest at the risk of inflicting annoyance or greevous harm upon others. ous harm upon others.

grievous harm upon others. A REMARKABLE PHENOMENON. — About nine o'clock on Sunday evening the atten-tion of the people in the neighborhood of the Reading Railroad depot was attracted by the movements of a strange-looking object which appeared vibrating to and fro in the air, about two hundred feet above the roots of the tallest houses. At times the object seemed motionless. Now and then it would move through the dense ime describing an arc of considerable sweep. and at another seeming to be more or less con-tracted. Its movements were accompanied by a rugtling noise — now like the sound of a news-paper futtering in the breeze, while again it was more distinct, resembling the flapping of the wings of a bird of huge size. Once the ob-ject turned itself about, and its size was dis-tingtly seen, presenting the appearance of a huge fan, with a surface dimly transparent and of a whitish cast. Again, a dull, yellow-ish, yet luminous body, would detach itself from the object, and after oscillating irregu-larly in the airreshooting now westerly and now easterly—would diverge from ahorizontal direction, and, after a lightning-like more-ment, would suddenly disappear. Persons who happened to be traversing the streets in this locality had their attention arrested by the appearance of this singular object, and stoped to gaze at it, so that in an intrediby short time the streets and side-walks were ous theories were advanced to account for the strange and mysterious phenomeno. At the end of half an hour, when the public rougiven forth by the body, or whatever it was, suddenly died away, and the object itself as abordity disappeared. For a long time the throng remained stationary in the streets, and in a short time the streets were descride. T. S.-Since writing the above, we have a as any the time the streets were descride. T. The list was then called, and the following busi-ness transacted:

The first was then canted, and the following ous-ness transacted: Leopold Levy vs. James Frinck. The action was originally brought into the State courts and certi-hed to this court by the defendant. The allegation is that the defendant, who was formerly a provost marshal, stized a quantity of shirts, drawers, and pantaloons from the plantitif, who kept a clothing store in South street. A witness, who accompanied the plantiff to the provost's office, testified that he refused to give up the goods. The two then went to a general, who told him to go back to the provost's and tell him to give up the goods. On returning to the marshal, he sent the two into the cellar, but there was no goods there.
