THE SIEGE OF CHARLESTON.

Capture of Fort Wagner and Battery Gregg.

General Gillmore's Official Report.

Bombardment of Fort Moultrie.

Attack on Batteries Beauregard and Bee.

Fortress Mifflin, Sept. 6, 1863.

The U. S. Spanish steamer Cleator just arrived from Charleston.

Gen. Gillmore dug out and captured seventy-five men from their rifle pits.

OFFICIAL DISPATCHES FROM GEN. GILLMORE AND ADMIRAL DAHLGREN.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Sept. 5, 1863.

Very full official dispatches from General Gillmore and Admiral Dahlgren have been received at the department by the recent arrivals from Morris Island.

The dispatches from Gen. Gillmore represent everything as progressing favorably.

Admiral Dahlgren's reports contain nothing of special public importance, as a violent storm prevented active operations on the part of the fleet.

Both write in good spirits, and express the fullest confidence in the success of their operations against the city, which must in the end inevitably be captured.

The shelling of the city has undoubtedly been resumed before this time, as several guns had been placed in position which would reach it.

THE PEOPLE ANXIOUS TO SURRENDER THE CITY—EFFECT OF THE BOMBARDMENT.

Boston, Sept. 6, 1863.

C. F. Fulton writes from Morris Island, August 29, that despatches were received from Morris Island every day, representing that the people of Charleston are anxious to surrender the city; but Beauregard is determined to devote it to destruction.

The shelling process caused general rejoicing, Beauregard having pledged his reputation to it as an impossibility, and a mere Yankee bravado.

It has been ascertained that the first shell fired from the marsh battery entered a house occupied by a number of officers, killing several and destroying the house.

Deserters say that there are but 25 men in Sumter, and that it will be blown up as soon as an attempt is made to take possession.
