WARNING TO YOUNG LANGES—The London Star in its gossip with his renders, pocently gare the following good story, which it asserts to be quite popular among certain circles of the metropolis:

"The precedious young Lord A., whose wit has rendered him the fion of the W——Club, came rendered him the fion of the W- Club, came out with a new joke the other night before that honorable body, that has added fresh laurels to his already brilliant regulation; en parenthesese, the W-- Club is composed of scions of the British nobility, and has arrived at the age remarkable for its raptures over pretty ballet dancers, its affected drawl and lisp in conversation, its tendency to drive a team tandem, and to sport a showy 'tiger.' 'You must know my dear W.'s,' said A., 'that I was down a day or two since at the horticultural fate at C. The bourgeoise were out in full force with their prefty daughters upon their arms, fresh and resy as May mornings I saw a charming face among the crowd that quite infatuated me, and desirous of a closer observation accordingly edged my way carefully through the throngs, until I had arrived within a few paces distant, and near enough to distinguish the conversation proceeding between herself and mamma. She had the face of an angel; I gazed enraptured, fascinated, awaiting auxicusly for the latter individual to cease her chat that the lovely creature before me might respond, thus giving me a chance to hear the music of those exquisite lips. Presently Philadelphia and Reading Rall Road. mamma says-My dear, how have you progressed in your botany, I believe they call it, at school? What is the name of this flower? Oh, don't ask me, returns my angel-the hard Latin names puzzle me horribly. The only two flawers I can ever remember are the aurora horealis and the delirium tremens. My sympathising W.'s, imagine my indescribable construction at the unparalleled ignorance of the little sinner. Of course my dream was dispelled -- l can never forgive her for the shock I experienced."

SERING THE POINT .- Fat Beb Bender is as jolly as he is adipose, and therefore takes leisure and pleasure in studying out as many jokes as may be necessary. When the first issue of " poctage currency" came to hand, after reflecting for a while, he thought that he had a chance for a moderate sell, and accordingly started out to find a victim. The first man he met was Horace M., whom he thus accested:

"I say, Hornee, have you seen any of the new government postage currency notes?"

"No," was the reply. "Is there snything peculiar about them ?" "Yes," said Bob, "rather. Three of then just make a dollar." "A good idea," replied Harace; "it will be handy for making change. Have you got any with you ?" "Yes," replied Bob, holding out a fifty and two twenty fives. "Three of them just make a dollar, you see." "I see," said Horace, evidently feeling sold "a pretty good joke. Den't say anything about it, and I will get it off on Butler."

So providing himself with the necessary funds, he stepped into the clice of the Clerks of Councils, and thus addressed Butler, holding out the money to him:

"You see there ?" "Yes," answered Butler.

"Well," continued Horace, "those three just make a dollar." "What of it?" queried Butler.

"Why, don't you see the joke?"

 No."

"Well," said Horace, after a moment's pause evidently in deep bewilderment, "then the man that told me must be a d-d focl."

A JOKE.—A ragged looking rebel went into s Hoosier's house during the raid and got to putting on airs, telling the girls that he was John Morgan, and the old lady, who had "hearn on him," fainted and rolled under the table. The girls keeled over against the wall, fell over the chairs. &c. Seeesh was about going into a curboard, when a long sandy haired chap entered "Who the - are you?" said sandy, eyeing him closely.

"I'm Morgan. Why?"

"I'm told you're a hess at hissin', and as you've hugged the cle 'oman and squeezed the gals to death, I guess you'd better drop them ples and things." " Pizen things ?" shouted the rebel, turning pale as he dropped a load of pier, corn cakes, ham, &c., which he "confiscated" and had been eating heartily of. "I'm a gove goalin," and dropped upon the floor. The-gale tied him, and sandy and the old

"oman like to best him to death, and then lehim go.—Louisville Democrat.

Languagers, Pa., March 4, 1863.

Dr. G. H. Markley—Dent Sir; For many years I was the victim of Dyspepsia in its most aggrevated form; my system having become so much deranged and debilitated, that I was mable to perform any kind of labor, and the control of the most popular remedies of day, but need some of the most popular remedies of day, but name of them did me any good. My saferings cannot be described in words. I was then living at thopswell, Cheater country, and in 1857, as a last resort, dominanced the use of your medicines. They some afforded me relief from the neest painful symptoms which I had searcely hoped to obtain; and in a surprisingly sheft time I was completely restored to health, and I have alway sheft vom medicines in my family, and would not be without them upon any consideration, as they have never aince—not a symptom of any sheft ver medicines in my family, and would not be without them upon any consideration, as they have never lailed to do what you claim for them.

Respectfully yours.

This is but one of the many testimonials duily received in praise of this great medicine. For sale by HAKVEY EIRCH & BROTHER.
