A NEW JERSEY LOVE STORY.

DEATH OF THE HUSBAND OF A DAY—THE CONDUCTOR AND THE SCHOOL GIRL.

Our readers may remember a bit of horse-car romance that happened a while ago to a conductor in Jersey City, which, beginning in a delicious flirtation with a bread-and-butter school-girl of "sweet-sixteen," gradually rose, through all the gradations of courtship, to a settled engagement of the loving pair, and a final elopement and marriage. It turned out, however, that the girl had "sold" the conductor, who, for his part, imagined that he had won a splendid prize, and that the weary days of his horse-car drudgery were about to terminate forever. It seems that the girl's head was full of yellow novels, that she lived in the atmosphere of runaway matches—of rich heiresses marrying incog. noblemen—and so she persuaded herself that she was an heiress, and that her father was a Western millionaire, who had doomed her to the slavery of school life, when she ought to be enacting yellow literature dramas, and be the heroine of a stunning romance. The conductor was first caught by her luxuriant locks, and then by her racy yarns about her father's fabulous possessions in the growing West. And so the couple were married, the conductor borrowing the wherewith to enslave them both until one of them should die. The young wife was sent by her "husband" to her aunt in New York, to whom she blabbed the secret. Then the bright side of the future history was turned, and the dark side began to show itself. The girl's parents were made acquainted with the fact that their "gal" "Sal" had become a woman and a wife, and they hurried to New York and carried her off with them to the West. The husband went after her, and there learned that his wife's parents lived in a log house, and that "pa's chariot" was a wheelbarrow, and his "osses" an old buck goat and a cow. The conductor returned to Jersey City, "a wiser and sadder man." Last evening, as he was coming to the city as a passenger on an Erie street car, and whilst he was good-humoredly talking with the driver on the front platform, the horses gave a sudden leap, and he was hurled overboard, run over and killed.—New York Sun.

A CLEVER Yankee farmer, being much troubled with rats, and being determined to get rid of them, tried every possible plan, but without success. At last he got a lot of rats and shut them up in a single cage; they devoured one another till only a single one was left. He then turned this one loose when, excited with the blood of his fellow rats, and having become a genuine cannibal, it killed and ate all the rats it could find on the premises.—Journal of Agriculture.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Maine Farmer writes; "If I have a cow or a heifer which is inclined to kick, I take my stool and sit down, with my milking pail between my knees, with my left hand hold of one hind tent and my right one hold of a fore tent. I then commence milking, and if she tries to kick, hang on to the teats and keep on milking, as she can neither hurt me, the pail nor herself, nor prevent me from milking. I keep on milking until I get through. By thus persevering a few times, she will see she can do no harm, and will abandon the idea of kicking."

THE Bucks County Intelligencer says that there was a beautiful and rare incident this winter in Mrs. McDowell's flower garden in Wrightstown. A bed of Pansies (Viola Tricolor) during the greatest part of December was buried under a drift of snow. When the few days of mild weather came early in January, and the snow was melted off, the Pansies were growing, the buds were swelling, and in a few days the whole mass was in full and perfect bloom. This was a beautiful sight in an open garden in mid-winter, and the more remarkable from the severity of the weather throughout December, and the reflection how very delicate the parts of a flower are.

MAKING POULTRY PROFITABLE.—The place to which your chickens retire ought to have a dry floor, and be kept scrupulously clean; and as the floor is the coolest part of the room, their roosting ought not to be more than twelve inches high, and to be slanting, which will keep the warm air in the roost. Sitting hens can be cured by putting water in a vessel, to the depth of one inch, putting the hen into and covering the top of the vessel for about twenty-four hours. The vessel should be deep enough to allow the fowl to stand up. This is the best remedy we have ever tried. Earth-worms are greatly relished by confined fowls. Take a spade once a day and turn over the ground for your hens. They will soon run after you when they see you with the spade, and will amply reward you for the extra trouble to accommodate them, by an increased supply of eggs.—Canada Farmer.
