READING LIBRARY .- We mentioned yesterday that library shares should pay an annual contribution of one dollar.— This, however, is only on the shares two, ten, twenty or more shares, but really only uses one share for obtaining books. He pays his one dollar per annum on this share, but nothing on the rest. The shares not used are called dormant, -- the shares used active. If he chooses to do so he can make any of his dormant shares' active in the name of any person he may designate, and the share so activized pays one dollar annul contribution. This is an excellent arrangement. It would not be right that persons who have liberally subscribed a large number of shares, in order to aid the Library, should pay an annual contribution upon them, as a single share would answer all the purposes of obtaining books. They pay but one dollar per annum on a single share. They may, however, have some friend, perhaps a deserving obscured by tradition, but the good effects caused by his preaching will continue young man or woman, who is not able to buy a share.
