BLOOMSBURG.

The new year was ushered in with considerable noise. At the first stroke of the town clock for the hour of twelve-the last breath of the expiring year-the bells, with joyous peals, rang in the new, and every factory whistle sent forth its shrill announcement as if to frighten away the old, while in many of the churches the congregation on behded knee gave thanks that they were permitted to see the

Bloomsburg has great reason to bid farewell to 1893 with especial deference for she is one of the few towns upon which the late business depression has left only faint trace. There is no real want bere that would not receive immediate relief if it were made

Companies have shown much good judgment and real sympathy by retaining the most needy among their employes and reinstating as fast as pos-sible those first whose circumstances were most imperative-heads of families, one son from a family, etc. that way actual suffering has been kept at bay. All the industries, of which we have a goodly number, are working with nearly full force.

Twit-myer, of Honesdale, at the court house last evening, brought together not only the teachers, but a large con course of Housedate people, completely filling the large auditorium. The professor opened his tecture by a well and carefully proposed description of the World's fair. He spoke of its im-mensity, the gigantic scale on which everything was faid out, the beautiful and wonderful architecture. He said that the American people had never bad the love for sculpture they should have, but that the skillful manner in which it was wrought and arranged at the fair, would revive the people's love for it, until we should be carried back to Greeian glory.

He drew many and valuable lessons from the fair, pointing out the parts from which the most instruction could be gained. The Midway plaisance formed a total from which many les-sons were drawn. After the opening sons were drawn. After the opening lecture the professor, who was assued by his son, Edwin, had the lights from the stereoption thrown upon the convins. A map of the grounds was first exhibited and explained; after that the various buildings, exterior and interior views, seems on the streets and the Midway. When the picture of the old "Liberty" ball was thrown upon the canvas the house broke out into appliance. The lest view was that of the planse.
