KAIULANI PLOT DISCOVERED

Daughter of Liliuokalani is Urged for the ex-Queen's Cast Off Throne.

GROVER CLEVELAND'S PROTEGE

Interesting Incidents Illustrative of the Wanton and Savage Character of the Woman Whom the Democratic American Executive Proposed to Re-Establish Upon the Ruins of Republican Government in Honolulu—President Dole's Health—Prospects of the Provisional Government.

New York, Feb. 11. SPECIAL Hawaiian correspondence to the Sun, under date of Feb. 3, says: The news that the ex-queen had been driven into the arms of the savagery of her race as to demand the heads of her political enemies caused great excitement here, but after the first shock it was remembered that her grandfather was the first man hanged for murder in the Hawaiian Islands, the crime being the poisoning of his wife, "the imperial princess" of the royal house. Then, it was recalled that when the prince who used to stand in the way of Liliuokalani's heirship to the throne fell ill her covetous hand was more than suspected of having hastened his demise. As the story goes, the prince was convalescing after a long illness, and the doctor said he would get well. It was then that his sister appeared at the bedside carrying a bowl of poi, the native favorite dish. By her royal command all the attendants of the prince left the sick room, and the doors were locked.

Some of the poi was eaten, and in four hours the heir to Kalakaua's crown was a puff and starve corpse in whose body some "leperous distemper" had wrought the mortal change. There had no coroner in Hawaii then who could lay hands on the Lord's anointed, but the physicians who saw the body knew the cause of death.

Another characteristic incident. Once more in after years the Polynesian blood of the future patron of the axe and block showed itself through the thin range of civilization with which she had been clothed. Her real nature, Liliuokalani was in London then, a distinguished guest at Queen Victoria's jubilee. During the festivities the news of the uprising here which forced Kalakaua to accept a liberal constitution was carried to her. "Did my brother die?" she said. "If I had been there the streets of Honolulu would have run with blood before I should have let him give away an inch." In these phrases spoke the implacable savage of the ancient Polynesian type, "a chiefess"—as the Hawaiian title goes—"and she had stood by the streets of the white-haired missionaries fall into the basket with the same leer of barbarous content on her face with which she watched live pigs roast on the hot crust of Kilian's crater, when she made her pagan sacrifice, not many years ago, to the fabled goddess of the burning lake.

Knowing the ex-queen as they did, the annexation party was not surprised at her demand for blood, but the royalists were thrown into a state of political excitement and despair. They knew the nature of the woman, and they knew enough, but they thought that she had the cunning to dissemble until she had been restored to power. Their intelligence told them that the United States would never set her on the Hawaiian throne after such a display of blood. It was as she had made. On all sides the word was passed that Liliuokalani had ceased to be a factor in the political equation. The thought common among the monarchist leaders was what next. Naturally Guardian Davies had a suggestion to make. He had written a letter to a royalist journal he expressed abhorrence on the conduct of the ex-queen, and went so far as to say that previous acts of hers, of much less savage purport, had absolved her followers from the duty of allegiance to her.

KAIULANI'S SUPPORTERS' PLAN. Privately among the royalists he proposed a Kaiulani propaganda, and, although the name of the princess has not hitherto been one to conjure with in the Hawaiian Islands he has managed to give her case a standing which it had never before been able to obtain. It may now be said that Hawaii has a Kaiulani party, small, but capable of growing larger. Davies is a man of wealth and culture, but of ultra-British monarchist principles. For five years and he has had charge of the princess as her guardian, and he has manifested her youthful mind with skillful touch until she is now, in all but blood and color, an English gentlewoman. To put her on the throne, to marry her to his son, to govern her through her husband and through the Scotchman (Gleghorn), who calls himself her father, and to secure for his father-in-law the post of Hawaiian minister to the court of St. James, are the fond ambitions for which Davies works early and late.

SENTINEL IN A CHURCH

Rev. Father Hill, of Brooklyn, Assaulted by His Assistant, Rev. Dr. McDonald.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Feb. 11.—A sensation of the very largest kind was created this morning in St. Paul's Roman Catholic church, the oldest consecrated church in Brooklyn. It arose from an attack upon the pastor of the church, Rev. William J. Hill, at the very close of the altar, by his assistant, Rev. Dr. Patrick J. McDonald. The trouble occurred at the 10 o'clock mass when the church was crowded with worshippers. Father Hill is about 53 years of age, and it was under his successful administration that the parish was freed from debt and consecrated some years ago. Dr. McDonald came to the parish from Newark, N. J., and was originally from the diocese of Cloyne, Cork, Ire. He is a highly educated man, has traveled widely and, it is said, on a recent visit in ecclesiastical circles. He stated that Father Hill, it is said, that he had suffered from softening of the brain. He is of powerful physique, weighing about 250 pounds.

Dr. McDonald had been appointed by Pastor Hill to celebrate the mass at 10 o'clock, and also the high mass at 11. During the celebration of the former the worshippers were amazed to see Dr. McDonald approach Father Hill, who entered to assist at the celebration, and strike him a violent blow, falling on top of the floor. Before Father Hill could rise Dr. McDonald came to the chancel rail, and gesticulating wildly, exclaimed that there had been a conspiracy between Father Hill and Bishop McDonald to drive him from the diocese. He then turned and again assaulted Father Hill. Parishioners finally rushed forward and held him until the arrival of officers. He was subsequently taken to St. Peter's hospital for treatment in charge of an officer.

Plans for Putting the Road Upon a Sound Financial Basis. PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 11.—The successful rehabilitation of the Reading Railroad and its speedy reorganization for the present receivership were practically assured on Saturday when arrangements were concluded for wiping out the floating debt and putting the company in shape for restoration to the stockholders. The first step to this end, as decided upon by receivers, and now only awaiting the sanction of the court before being put into effect, is the issue of $5,000,000 of coal trust notes based on the coal in hand and the coal accounts of the company as collateral with which to pay off the $2,000,000 loan of Speyer & Co., and the $3,000,000 advanced by the Finance Company of Pennsylvania on the company's coal accounts, valued at over $7,000,000. The additional $500,000 necessary for this purpose will, it is understood, be

FOUNDERED AT SEA

An Unknown Vessel on the Shoals at Cape Hatteras. PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 11.—The unknown steamer that foundered with all hands on outer Diamond shoal, Cape Hatteras, last week, is believed here to have been the British steamship Olympia, Captain Coleman, from Matanzas, Cuba, February 1, for Philadelphia, with a cargo of 2,500 tons of sugar for the Franklin sugar refinery. From the description given by the life guards who caught a glimpse of the ill-fated steamer while she was drifting towards the shoals many points of resemblance to the Olympia are noted. The unknown steamer had a light colored smokestack, and the Olympia's was painted a buff color. The Olympia was a two masted schooner rigged vessel and so was the lost steamer.
