

ELLEN OSBORN'S LETTER.

Lenton Austerlitz and the Great "Dressmaking Party."

Ladies Who Make Their Summer Dresses in March Are Straying the Prophets of Styles as Well as the Frontiers.

"But it's Lent now, you know." Ah, yes; Lent is a name and a distinction. These things must be said, and these things not, runs the dialogue of the divines. They may not marry, nor hold a grand ball, or give more than a reasonable number of dinners.

SURELY A SQUANDER.

To too many people at once, but too frivolous.

But what is frivolous?

Oh, that each person must decide for himself. It is a question of conscience. So the "dressing" of the party that hills—that's a phrase the editorial writer usually finds it convenient to employ on Ash Wednesday morn—let's say so, as it might be. One dresses in low key, which is excellent taste at any time, for early church possibly once a week. Offense would be more than one's health would permit. For there are social duties.

The opera is a social duty. It comes into the scheme of Lent also as a relaxation. One needs amusement after the season, and it is very amusing to hear Gaius as Santuzza bewailing in high B flat and a Zingari around just the thing for a marriage. It is not Lent—the parody of her wailing lower. A cat's paw in the park is a duty, and the afternoon tea for persons with no modifications. Thus, and of course it always is. And it is excellent taste to wear subdued costumes. And extremely convenient to procure fresh spring and summer goods from the shops and indulge in a forty days' fast of delectating. As for mere Lent fasting, the idea is, of course, propounded, a week for the one hundred thousand or more who just.

And the sanctification of the flesh? Well, I have seen ladies one or two in the boys of fortune with who might assemble it better than their husbands, whose fortunes are at least self-indulgent. Into our American climate, with its sudden and abrupt changes, and the over-estimated clothing houses, it has pleased not a few modish mothers to introduce the British style of dressing their little ones regarding styles of pneumonia and Cholera. This is to be serious, the best remedy for a child's pneumonia is a few little dresses of red boy of four, in short black silk stockings, black shoes, black velvet hat and jacket and white-ribbed vest, over which low bonnet, baby carriage, even if the baby lives are entirely bare and white in the heat, or red in the draft, as may be. When in this garb, the child is kept in the house of the long yellow leather leggings which he wears out of doors, and would often like to wear indoors too.

The girl of three or four occupies this exposure. Even the most Anglo-American of American mothers are only half-American. The little girl's hair and her dress is a dress of a few little dresses, photographs, and "handwriting" as the saying is. The girl of three is that the skirt may be as long as that of a girl of sixteen or seventeen, and sixteen dresses are worn during these and sixteen more are worn during these, but here again our new world comes to the rescue. The child's dress is ever quite as short as in English and New York. So are low necks and short sleeves here as much in favor. Perhaps we see coming to that—don't you remember, in the old photograph album that funny picture taken of Aunt Mary, when she was a little girl and her chubby arms and plump neck were well displayed by a dirred frock of broad-shouldered, best suit that Aunt Mary had seen to buy in an English home and was put on in our own mother's establishment?

The velvet-lined hat and his sister in her single ruffled frill of white material that she wears over her shoulders, that girls who wear a ruffled frill to their sisters. The "very possible school suit" is almost unknown to the son of the Four Hundred. He is fed on plain, wholesome food and keeps fairly good hours—so much has fashion sensibly decreased—but upon his velvet and his lace, his curls and his patent leather shoes, his ribbons and his plumed hat, mamma lavishes her money and her care.

The result is instructive. So beautiful is the boy of today, in his hair, in his eyes, that he must have those enthusiasts of the gentler sex who are always wishing grown men to resume the velvets and the lace and the molting plumes and all the bravery of a hundred years ago. Give up the crusade, dear sisters. The men would outshine you!

Two other groups I've seen which seem to have caught the Lenten spirit, but are good all the year round, if one fancies and colors and subdued effects. One is a composition of dark gray with wide black satin ribbon sash. At the skirt bottom is a wide, smooth flounce, slashed up at intervals and bordered with narrow black embroidery. Wider embroidery is at the waist and neck, the sleeves and collar are of the usual sort. The other Lenten austerity is in the wardrobe of the same pretty widow. In one sense it is less austere, because very smart and English; but more austere in that it is horribly ugly, with its long black line at neck and sleeves, and skirt and its belittlement of black satin ribbon. Such a gown one wears when it is necessary to suggest severity and talk about the poor—who don't wear tea gowns. Some time I must write an essay, a volume, a magazine, on the use and abuse of lace. But not now. A lively interest in the styles of the coming season always comes with or a little before Ash Wednesday. The great movable dressing fast of the year must have its prophets as well as its preachers, and they say that 1891 will be another year of blouses, of waists, of frocks. There will be soft waists of silk and masculine opportunities, waists with bluish uncolorful starched collars and bosoms. Tails will be played in a pink silk waist and gray cloth skirt and under a sailor hat of white straw trimmed with the pink. They vary these colors to suit the case, of course. The modified lion jacket with or without strap and button will, if made in dark blue, with a blue skirt and a white silk waist, be appointed a wide smiling or boating suit, or a longer jacket for those who prefer it, with the usual immaculate white shirt and blue pockets. For the full Mignollet, striped skirts or longer trousers, will become more and more common, and may even become necessary. As the season such suits are already in the market. For a lot of these purposes, a jacket, blouse or frock, one will not have much to choose from, and so you buy.

A classic dress will be quite plain, and of moderate length. A pretty walking costume will be a light and comfortable slip of an article in a light and plain, or a row of two narrow bands, light and comfortable. A light and comfortable slip of an article in a light and plain, or a row of two narrow bands, light and comfortable. A light and comfortable slip of an article in a light and plain, or a row of two narrow bands, light and comfortable.

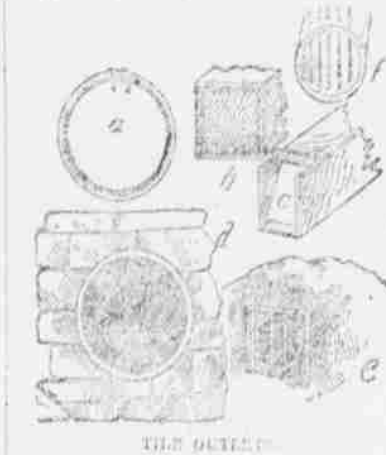

As for materials there is no less necessity than usual. Moire silks, satins for dressy effects, or crepes, whips, shawls, wraps, and so on. You know your fabrics are much less in quantity than usual, owing to factories shut down or on half time. High effects in hats and evening cultures are more rampant than ever. I've seen a picture hat with brim of pink and wonderful complexity, very low in front, very high over the temples, low again at the sides and with high soaring plumes between that was really awe-inspiring. And so were the high collars of broad dunes at the top of the neck, built up quite in the colonial style.

For does not every woman—every pretty woman at least, in secret or without concealment, turn for the days of Lent, for velvet, satin, pearls, jewelry and all the other things of our country?

SOME TILE OUTLETS.

Excellent Device for Preventing Serious Damage to the Brain.

These special tiles are taken to protect the outlet of the brain there is danger of its being badly damaged. If it is in the posture, stock trousers about it are liable to crowd the tile out of place or break them. Where land wastes very easily, heavy rains will frequently displace them. It is also sometimes desirable to close the opening in the drain that discharges rainwater, etc., cannot enter it during a dry time and build an obstruction. Several such devices are illustrated herewith. One particularly suited to a tile which has its opening in a bank of a creek or other some distance from the bottom. It is merely a wall of stone or brick laid in cement. This protection prevents the washing away of earth from about the outlet, or a displacement of the outlet, or a displacement of the outlet, or a displacement of the outlet.

THE OUTLET.

simply of a wooden box made of such hard wood, open at one end which is slanted over the end of the drain. At the other end a door, hinged at the top, is so arranged that the water can readily flow out but nothing can go up the tile. It is a similar box, square at the outer end, over which iron rods are secured or a piece of strong wire netting fastened. It is simply a tile with holes in the top and bottom through which iron rods are passed. A tile to the opening of which a circular piece of galvanized sheet iron is so attached that the water can pass out but the entrance of any foreign matter is prevented. It is similar with square tiles for the soil. These last are seldom made in the west but if obtainable are more easily fitted with a piece of sheet iron. Often a small sewer tile is used to finish the lower end of a drain. The object in all these cases is to prevent an obstruction to the flow of water and to protect the drain.—Orange Judd Farmer.

She Couldn't.

An old woman of undeniable Celtic origin entered a downtown savings bank the other day and walked up to the desk. "Do you want to draw or deposit?" asked the gentlemanly clerk. "Now, I don't. I want to put some in," was the reply. "The clerk pushed up the book for her signature, and, indicating the place, said: 'Sign on this line, please.'" "Above it or below it?" "Just above it." "What whole name?" "None." "Before it was married?" "No, just as it is now." "Oh, can't write." — Boston Transcript.

Lady's—One more question: Is the defendant addicted to the use of tobacco? Witness—I don't know, sir. He smokes cigarettes.—Chicago Tribune.

Feel Their Pleasantry. Mrs. Doocood—Do you feel the hard lines, my good man? Trap—No, ma'am; everywhere I go they tell me there's no work.—Puck.

Just the Opposite. She—I can't endure him. He is too small for me. He—Oh, you do him an injustice. He is a tremendous bore.—Halla.

A Permanent Trouble. Gladly—I would wish that makes me so absent-minded? Miss Castigate—Nature.—Chicago Record.

Fat is wanting in most foods, or, if present, is not assimilated. The result is loss of flesh and strength.
