A New Hypocrite Story of the Heart. After putting the patient through what I have already narrated, Dr. H. E. Lewis turned to us and said: "Now this is a very sensitive subject, and I am going to try upon him a rare and rather risky experiment. I am going to stop the beating of his heart. Doctor, will you put your finger upon his left pulse, while I keep mine upon his right?" He addressed a rising physician of the town who had known the patient from childhood. Dr. — was sceptical and hostile, but at our instance he consented. Keeping one hand on the lad's wrist, Lewis laid the other gently over his heart. Within five minutes or two the patient lost his rich and vivid color, and Lewis counted the decreasing strokes till he announced that they were scarcely recognizable. "Is that not so, doctor?" he asked. Dr. — was extremely unwilling to speak; but, under the urgency of some of us who stood by, he at last said in so many words that the pulse had sunk to almost nothing. The boy stirred, a ghastly statue, for a minute longer, when Lewis, saying hurriedly, "The pulse is now imperceptible; we must protect this no longer," took away his hand from the breast to the evident relief of his improvised colleague. But it was to the evident relief, too, of their common patient.

I remember distinctly to this day the ashen hue even of his lips, and the wonderful gradations through which the blood found its way back into them and into the whole young face—a face still asleep, but now glowing as if it had traveled a long way from the margin of the grave.—London Spectator.

Childhood's Generosity. There was a pretty scene of childlike impulsiveness in one of the elevated railroad cars lately. A bright faced little boy with long golden curls and warm wraps of fashion sat beside his mother, very evidently thoroughly pleased with the world and everybody. On the seat beside him was a dainty box of bonbons, into which the child's hand dipped from time to time. At one of the stations a woman carrying a child, also a boy, entered the car. A glance told that the woman belonged to the great workaday class of humanity. Toil was written in deep, hard lines over a face that was still young, and the child she carried had an emaciated look.

The poor woman, with her child sat down in the seat beside the bright faced little one who was so industriously feeding on the confectionery. The candy eater looked at the grimy little fellow beside him in a sort of silent wonder. Then in a quick, child-like way he thrust the box of bonbons toward the poor boy. The latter's eyes opened to twice their size as he dipped his thin hand into the box and transferred a big sugared cherry to his mouth. These two children looked at each other, and both laughed merrily.—New York Times.

A Quick Business Transaction. A quick piece of foreign financial transaction was achieved by the Ohio Valley National. A gentleman called early in the afternoon and stated that he wished to pay a bill in Paris of 50,000 francs. A cablegram was sent at 4.30 to the bank's correspondent in Paris, and just after the Ohio had opened the following morning—that is, a few minutes after 9—the sender called and stated that he had received a cablegram announcing that the money had been properly paid.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

"Feel Like a New Man!"

So says everyone who has tried Paskola, the great flesh-forming food.

Nothing equals it for building up sound, healthy flesh, enriching the blood and imparting new strength.

It is just the thing for thin, weak people, who get no benefit from the food they eat.

Dedicate stomachs cannot stand sickening oils and other fatty mixtures. Paskola has replaced them.

It is easily taken and pleasant to the taste. Being pre-digested, it is instantly absorbed into the system.

Ask your druggist for a bottle, and try it!

A pamphlet giving full particulars respecting Paskola will be sent on application to the Pre-Digested Food Co., 30 Reade St., N. Y. City.
