CHAPTER V. It took three days more to enlist the men necessary to fill the ranks of the Shenandoah guards, as the company called itself, and while awaiting orders from Richmond an election of officers was held. Only a few of the volunteers were surprised at Royal Kenton's enlistment. They were men who had but one political belief-state rights. They were not looking beyond it to the southern confederacy, but had enlisted and were going to the front to fight for Virginia. Why shouldn't he fight for his adopted state? So argued the captain, so argued the rank and file and many citizens of the town, and, but for Duke Wyle, Kenton would have been elected second lieutenant of the company. When he saw how things were going, he called Steve Brayton aside and said:

'Look here, Steve, you fellows are as blind as young kittens. If that Yankee hadn't signed the roll, what would have happened to him?"

'Tar and feathers and a ride on a rail!" replied Steve. 'And be was sharp enough to realize it. He enlisted as a blind." 'Shoo! How kin he un bluff that We are going to the front. The first chance he gets be will desert to his side. He's playing a Yankee trick on you, and you ain't sharp enough to see it." Doggone him, but yo' may be right, lootenant, yo' may be right!" "Of course I'm right! You just move about right smart and give the boys the tip. Don't even elect him corporal. He's just one o' that sort that if he gets any office at all he'll want to run the whole company.

"And we don't propose to be run?"

"Of course not! Steve soon turned the tide against Kenton, and that without any one knowing exactly what was taking place. The citizens of the town were almost as much interested in the election as the members of the company. The old lawyer had left Kenton to settle the matter according to his own judgment. When he heard that the young man had enlisted, he was secretly pleased, and it was his influence which made a number of the rank and file decide on electing Kenton as third officer of the company.
"I am not in the least disappointed," replied Royal when the result of the voting was known and the office had gone to another. "I enlisted without thought of position and prefer the ranks to any place they could give me. Besides, I am a Yankee, you know, and it is only natural that there should be a little feeling in the matter.

There were two callers at the Percy mansion that evening. Duke Wyle came first. As previously stated, he had been a frequent caller for a year or more. Some people had even said that there was an engagement. That was a mistake, however. Try as hard as he could. he could remember little or nothing to encourage him in believing that he was a favored suitor. Neither had he the slightest reason for believing that Royal Kenton had any advantage in that respect. It was simply the fact that he was also a visitor at the house that roused the spirit of jealousy and the desire to work mischief. His reception was cordial by both mother and daughter, and both congratulated him on his election as one of the company officers. This paved the way for him to observe:

'I presume you have heard of the unblushing assurance of the Yankee, as all call him, in making every effort to be elected second lientenant?"

"Do you refer to Mr. Kenton?" quickly answered Marian.

"Of course. He is the only Yankee I'know of in this locality. The men saw through his scheme before it was too late, however." 'Did he have a scheme?'' asked Mrs.

'Most certainly, ma'am-that is, the members of the company fully believed you, Mr. Wyle?" 'Of course not, but I'm a born Virginian, you know." "Well, I think Mr. Kenton acted according to his conscience and best judgment, and that the goards would have had reason to be proud of him as an of-

"Yes, I think so, too," replied the mother. The lieutenant realized that he was walking on dangerous ground and let the subject drop, but in his own mind he decided that he had new canse for hating Royal Kenton and removing him from his path. During a moment of silence a plan flashed through his mind, and he presently said: 'It is an old saying, you know, that blood will tell. It may prove false in this case, and I hope it will, for Kenton is a fine young man. Suppose, howeyer, he should actually desert to the Yankees and come back to fight against

"Waal, lootenant," grinned Steve as

"Curse him, but what business had he to assume command of the company?" replied Wyle. "I was just about to halt and re-form when you fools all rushed off after him!"

"Yes-I see!" remarked Steve, "but I wouldn't find any fault if I was yo'. We uns is the only company in the regiment which captured a cannon, and the boys feel as peart as game chickens about it. Reckon I wouldn't say nuthin agin the Yankee either! It won't look exactly right, you see!"

"You and the Yankee have suddenly become bosom friends!" sneered the officer.

"Not exactly, lootenant, but I hain't got nuthin agin him no mo'. If he un's a Yankee spy, we orter hev about 10,-000 mo' of 'em on our side!"

Late that evening after the stragglers had rejoined their commands and order had been brought out of confusion Lieutenant Wyle received an order to report at brigade headquarters. On his arrival he was admitted to the presence of General Jackson, who had that day won his famous sobriquet of "Stonewall."

"I can wait," he said to himself as he walked down street. "When the "Lieutenant Wyle," said the general news comes back here that Kenton has as he received him, "I am sorry to learn deserted to the enemy, I shall have the that your captain is so severely wounded that it will be months before he will be able to take the field again. I saw an hour later may not have been more him in the field hospital two hours ago and congratulated him on the heroism displayed by his company. I wish fort from it. If you will give me his name, decline. I should have remained in the I will see that he is promoted to the position he deserves. He is a private, is "This is only the beginning," replied | he not?"

"Y-yes, sir," stammered the lieutenant, confused and chagrined that his rival should be thus honored. "His name, sir, is Ike"-

It was on his tongue to rob Royal Kenton of his laurels and transfer them to Ike Baxter, but he could not do it. "It was a private named Kenton, I believe," he said as he lifted his eyes to those of the general again.

"Thanks. He is a brave man, and you ought to be proud of him. You village turned out to bid them godspeed | must not feel put out about it, lieutenant. All of us are new to war yet. Coolness will come with experience. I have no fault to find with any of the officers or men. That's all, sir.

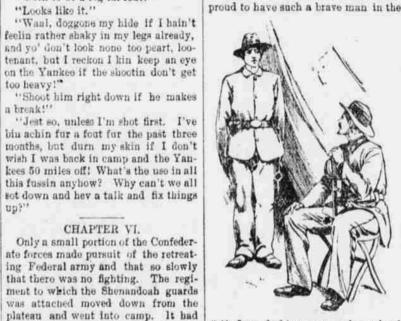

The officer saluted and retired and made his way back to his company. But for one thing he would have sent for Royal Kenton and offered him his hand and his congratulations. Both loved the same maiden. Even if both had stood on the same footing in her estimation when the company left the valley events had occurred that day which would give his rival the lead.

The first thing Lieutenant Wyle did after reaching his lines was to send for Ike Baxter. He was much of the same mold as Steve Brayton-a small farmer, shiftless and uneducated and baving a decided distaste for anything like hard work, but far more bigoted in his sectional feelings. He was not one of the handful Kenton had rallied and led back, but was forced up with others latter on and had his musket been examined after the battle was over it would have been discovered that it had not been once discharged.

I thought. He's been biding his time. "Ah, I am glad to see you, my brave boy!" said the lieutenant as Ike came to the Yankees. This is what he has scuffing into his tent. "I want to compliment and congratulate you on the pluck and bravery you displayed in that "Of course I do. The captain wants battle. I had my eye on you most of you to make it your business today, in the time, and I neversaw a cooler man case the Yankees come out, to watch in the face of danger." him. "I enlisted to fight them dod durned Yankees, and I went for 'em the best I knowed how," said Ike, who had recovered from his surprise and was now willing to take all the credit extended.

"Yes, you did a power to help drive 'em back." replied the officer, "and I'll see that you are properly rewarded. By the way, Ike, what are the men saying about that Yankee?" 'He un can't be no Yank."

"Why not?" "Why, he un fout dead agin 'em. They all is sayin that he's a snorter to fight. Reckon be'll get office."

"I wish this fellow was out of our company," mused Wyle. "So long as he is with us we have got to be on our guard against his Yankee tricks. He'd feel proud to take us all over to the Yankees.

"Why doan' yo' un git him out?" asked Ike after a moment's reflection. "I'd like to, but how can I? I've just come from brigade headquarters, where General Jackson asked after him and as much assaid he'd promote him. He'll probably give him the place I want you to have. He's fooled Jackson the same as he has the rest of us."

"And Jackson will make he un a corporal?" asked Ike.

"Sure to." "Say, lootenant," whispered Ike as he drew a step nearer, "I reckon I know how to get that Yank outer this company!"

"Shoot him out!" "I-I don't understand!"

"If he un goes, do I git to be corporal?" 'Yes." "Then yo' leave it to me! Mebbe it will take a week or two, but yo' bet yo'r last dollar he un's got to go!' [TO BE CONTINUED.]

A Ghost That Robbed.

A ghost robbed a house in Soho square, London, in the year 1704 in a most approved or disapproved fashion, and the case is worth reporting. A gentleman who appeared to be quite wealthy took rooms in a fashionable house in the locality mentioned. A short time afterward he told his landlord that his brother was dead, and asked permission to bring the body to his rooms while the arrangements for interment were completed. Permission was granted, and a handsome coffin arrived, containing what appeared to be a corpse in a long white shroud. The coffin was placed in the dining room. Next night, after all had retired save the lodger and servant maid, an apparition appeared to the latter. The apparition was a tall, specter like figure, with every appearance of a chost.

The maid rushed upstairs to her master nd mistress' room, followed by the ghost, who mounted sentinel at the door, contorted his features and waved his hands. The maid crept under the bed and her employers hid their faces under the bed clothing. At this time a great noise like furni-ture moving was heard in the house, and the three terrified objects came to the conclusion that the house had been taken posession of by a regiment of spirits. At last all was quiet, the ghost had disappeared and a search was made. The house was found to have been stripped of every particle of furniture, and all the valuable amily plate had gone too. No psychological society investigated the phenomenon but the police did, and the lodger and the ham corpse were both hanged at Tyburn. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Happy medium.

Father Boyle, the late pastor of St. Matthew's church, said that a worthy Irishman, with an impediment in his speech, brought him a child to be baptized. While making a record of it he was in some doubt as to the correct spelling of the family name given him, and asked the man

"Indeed, and I don't write at all," was the reply.

"I just want to know," said Father Boyle, "whether the name is 'McGrath' or 'Magrath'-whether the second part of it s spelled with a big 'G' or a little 'g.' After scratching his head hopelessly the puzzled parent saw his way out of the difficulty. "Well, father, just spell it wid a middlin' sized 'g.' "-Washington Post.
