MISS POLLARD AGAIN SPEAKS

Recalled to Testify About Her Life and Experiences.

WESLEYAN COLLEGE TESTIMONY

Rankin Rossell's Story is Contradicted by Mrs. Brown, Vice President of the Seminary—Typewriter Louise Lowell Remembers Interesting Portions of Colonel Breckinridge's Formal Letters—Mary Yancy Also Gives Testimony Favorable to the Plaintiff—The Basket Identified by the Colored Servant.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—The night before last the effect of reducing the attendance at the district court this morning to the thinnest audience yet gathered, and some of the men present wore a sleepless air.

The defense made an unexpected move by calling Miss Pollard to the stand questioning her about the birth of her second child, which she says was born at noon on February 3, 1888. "I only held it in my arms two hours, according to my promise to him," she began.

"Now, now, Miss Pollard," Mr. Butterworth began nervously, warning Miss Pollard with great solicitude to confine herself to answering his questions. Mr. Wilson also admonished her.

The child had been taken to the Protestant Foundling asylum on Fourteenth street in Washington, where she had visited it with Dr. Mary Parsons.

The second time she saw the child was on May 3 at the undertaker's establishment in Washington, where she was buried. When Mr. Butterworth asked how the funeral expenses had been paid she said that Mrs. Parsons had looked after that.

Miss Pollard had been perfectly self-possessed while she was being questioned about her child and had spoken in a low, almost plaintive tone. "I don't know much about those things, you know, Mr. Butterworth," she had said when he was asking her about the regulations of the Foundling asylum.

WITNESSES FOR THE PLAINTIFF. After recess the plaintiff called Charles Sawyer, a nephew of Mrs. Kean, Miss Pollard's aunt. He was examined to prove that during the period from 1880 to 1888, with the exception of one brief ten days' visit to her uncle at Gratonburg, Christmas 1888, Miss Pollard had never been absent from her aunt's at night. Another relative of Miss Pollard's, George H. Kean, corroborated Sawyer's testimony.

Mrs. Brown, who was vice-president of Wesleyan college in Cincinnati when Miss Pollard was a student there, was the next witness. When the intercourse between the plaintiff and defendant began Mrs. Brown produced the record of the college for the year 1883, and identified the entry under Miss Pollard's name.

Guided by Mr. Carlisle, Mrs. Brown proceeded to contradict Mr. Rankin Rossell, who had testified he broke his engagement with the plaintiff because she allowed him to "kiss her and hug her" in the reception rooms of the college.

"Certainly not," said Mrs. Brown to a question whether the rules of the college permitted a student to entertain a guest for an hour and a half to two hours in the reception rooms. Mrs. Brown added that even girls who were engaged were not permitted to see their fiancés except on Friday evening and then publicly.

STORY OF THE TYPewriter. Mrs. Louise Lowell, the typewriter who had testified that Colonel Breckinridge had brought her a letter to copy, beginning "My Dear Sister Louise," and had also employed her to address envelopes to Miss Pollard, was recalled by the plaintiff and asked by Judge Wilson to tell what was in the "Sister Louise" letter. Mrs. Lowell said: "The writer spoke of great love between the two and the disparity in their ages could grow so great a difference in their ages could grow so great a difference."

"Do you remember any communication that had a peculiar address to it?" "One letter was addressed 'My Dear Spittire' or 'My Dear Miss Spittire.'" "Do you remember anything that was said in the letters?" "In one of the letters that I remember very distinctly much doubt was expressed as to the letters having reached their destination, and said: 'If you receive this letter write me a postal card, asking me for a report of the civil service commission and sign it Mary Smith.'"

Scottsdale, Pa., April 5.—The march of the strikers from Connellsville to Mount Pleasant and their stop here last night proved only a blank cartridge, and the "solid north," as the striking leaders call it, remains unbroken. "That the strike is a failure is not questioned now."

When they reached Besmer they were met by Sheriff McCann, of West moreland county, and 100 deputies and arrested to Mount Pleasant, then back to the county line near Iron Bridge. McCann displayed commendable courage, and no doubt the prompt and determined position he took prevented the destruction of property and life, as the Hungarians were in a very ugly mood over the arrest of Davis, and they made open threats of violence when they left this place.
