ly a local affectionhowever, and can be attributed to a great extent to the large number of college commencements out of town and similar exercises here in the city. In consequence social matters had to be dropped during the preparation and the outpouring of parents and brothers and sisters from the city to witness the graduations. Yet from a social stand-point and the many girls and men wno have been languishing for "the crowd" to swell, it is just as well that the commencement agony is over and that it appeared mostly in a big lump during week. The welcome reaction is bound to come quickly.

Speaking of commencement recalls the fact that the termination of school days is considered in a varied array of lights. Your studious young man with his proverbial grotesque shape and awkward gait, swallows commencement like the last hurried morsel of a 10-cent quick lunch and on the principle of a five-dollar-per-week clerk's moon hour, scurries off to renewed activity either in the studious, professional or business world. It is somewhat different with your whitetrousered, negligos-shirted, debouair young man. Commencement to him is a dreaded hoodoo. As soon as he makes up his mind that it is inevitable he does his part on the Fourth of July order and skyrockets the whole matter through as an event of good riddance to bad rubbage. He afterwards assumes the worldly wise and complaisant air of the fuilfledged college young man and with much turned up trousers and a wide-brimmer bound with a ribbon of varied hue enters into the season's frivolities as a matter of course, Mater foudly looks at the young man and thinks how sorely he needs the recreation. Paterfamilias, however, wipes his glasses, winks his other eyand grunts to himself: "You can go it this summer—I've been there my self but you'll work in the fall all right.

Of course there are college men an I college men, and to the credit of American universities be it said that the mill grinds out a sturdy, brainy brawn of youth which comprises one of the mainstays, if not the anchor, of the nation. But the summer girl doesn't look at it in that light. She welcomes with the balance of the sisterhood the hordes who for the season will worship at her shrine; possibly her altar will receive a lifetime's affectionate worship. Anyhow, the summer, the men, the young ladies and precedent are here-what are you

The reverend gentleman has been pastor of the church for over nine years, and with-out doubt, they have been years of prosperity. From a small beginning the church has increased in members, and its spiritualizing influence is mightily feit in the city. The home stree street work is carefully and efficiently carried on, while its benevolence is as far cess. A small function was given yester reaching as the Christian activity of the Presbyterian denomination.
