GENERAL NEWS OF INDUSTRIES

Notwithstanding the labor troubles in the Connellsville coke region, says the Philadelphia Stockholder, the output and shipments of coke have steadily increased to such an extent that they now exceed the figures of the corresponding period last year. For the week ended July 29, 1893, the output was 88,106 tons; for the same week this year it was 109,077 tons, while shipments were 5,023 tons, against 4,389 tons the same week last year. The weekly output and shipments since July 29, 1893, show great irregularity; for that week, as stated, the output was 88,106 tons, from which it decreased in the next four weeks to 27,900 tons; it then began to increase, and for the week ended Dec. 30 the output was back to 87,034 tons. After moving irregularly around these figures for several weeks, another spurt was made, and for the week ended March 31 the output aggregated 113,921 tons. This was the highwater mark, and the strike which followed a few weeks later brought the output for the week ended May 19 down to 11,989 tons. Since then there has been a steady advance, and for the week ended July 28 (the last report we have received) the output aggregated 109,977 tons. The range of changes in shipments does not, of course, show such a wide fluctuation, for the reason that the various coke companies have large stocks on hand, but they decreased nevertheless from 6,030 tons on April 7 to 529 tons on April 19. Since then shipments have increased, and for the week ended July 28 they amounted to 5,023 tons. It is known that output as well as shipments have largely increased since then, but to what extent we are unable to state at this time.

The Lehigh Coal and Navigation company and the inter-County Street Railway company, which is backed by Philadelphia capitalists, are at loggerheads over the latter's proposed line of electric road between Lansford and Tamaqua, in Rahn township, Schuylkill county. A fight is on between the two companies, and the first battle has been won by the Navigation company, which has applied for an injunction to restrain the street railway company from building its line between the points named; the case will be argued today. The claim is made that the latter company has no legal right to the road, and that the construction of a line of railway will seriously impede the business of the Navigation company, which requires the continuous use of the roads in Rahn township, especially the road leading from Lansford to Tamaqua, which roads, it is required by an act of assembly, to keep in repair. It is also charged that the supervisor of the township declined to give the railway company authority to construct its line until after it had agreed to employ the supervisor and his son as long he lived, and a written agreement to this effect was entered into. The case is attracting considerable attention, not only because of the right to build the road, but because of the charge preferred against the supervisor; and it is of local interest because Philadelphia capital is invested in both companies.

With one or two exceptions earnings reported yesterday continued to contrast favorably with the record of a year ago, and also with that of early last month. Big Four decreased in July $289,000 and was one of the exceptions, as was also Denver and Rio Grande, which for June had a decrease in net of $169,158. New York, Ontario and Western on the other hand made for the same period a very satisfactory showing, increasing its gross earnings $5,069 and its net $14,752. New York Central made the usual poor showing in June. It operated 2,399 miles of road, 75 more than in the like period of 1893. Gross earnings amounted to $8,158,002, a decrease of $768,223.

According to the Binghamton Herald few people in this country realize the enormous task Russia has on her hands in the building of her Siberian railway which, extending from Chellabinsk on the west to Vladivostok on the east, a distance of 7,100 versts or 4,700 miles, will cost when completed more than 350,000,000 roubles, or about $200,000,000, and will open up a section now in wilderness. It is owned by the government and will be operated by it. Some portions of it are now in operation, but the main line will not be completed for at least ten years yet. There is ample reason for the Russian bear looking to Chinese aggression in the present disturbance over there, for while China is exceedingly sluggish, she has in time past looked upon the building of this road across country north of her as a transgression of her rights and may in time attempt interference. This possibility has not made Russia any too friendly, and in the present struggle it is declared she would like to see China conquered. The great northern wall has kept out northern hordes, but whether or not Japan and Russia will not yet divide Chinese territory between them is a question that time only can answer. Russia certainly acts as if she had an interest in Japan's success.

It is reported that the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railway company has acquired the Mississippi River and Bonne Terre railroad, which has forty-seven miles of the road running from Riverside to Doe Run, Mo. It is said also that the Burlington people will extend the road to Memphis and build a connecting line from Riverside to North St. Louis, a distance of twenty-eight miles. The road purchased cost $840,000 to build and owns $55,000 worth of rolling stock.

According to the last universal statistics the railroad mileage of the United States is about 35,000 miles more than the whole of Europe, the greatest railroad division of the old continent; 146,000 miles more than Asia, 138,000 more than Africa, and 143,000 more than Australia. Our railway mileage is about 800 miles more than that of these four great divisions of the eastern continent combined, whereas their aggregate receipts are annually about 368,000,000 pounds sterling more than ours, which shows how much more business is done on a greatly reduced mileage without increasing the rates.

MINOR INDUSTRIAL NOTES:

Bracker's wire nail mill at Cleveland, the largest concern in the country, has resumed after several months of idleness; it will work double time in all departments.

Net earnings from traffic of the Ontario and Western, July 1, 1893, to June 30, 1894, aggregated $1,109,579; bond interest and charges, $690,013; carbed on stock, $419,566.

A spark thrown from the furnace ignited the roof of the engine house at No. 2 North Lebanon furnace Tuesday morning and damaged the building to the extent of $8,000. Several firemen and laborers were more or less painfully hurt during the fire by the breaking of a ladder and the fall of half-burned timbers. Their injuries are not serious.

The Trunk lines are generally reporting that their freight business between Chicago and the seaboard is better than last summer at this time; they are sending more freight west, and the live stock east bound is unprecedented in amount, owing to scarcity of corn and pasturage west.

The stoppage of the Reading Coal and Iron company's collieries for three days a week, as announced, is not alone the result of slackness of orders, but is in part caused by the shortage of the water supply at many of the collieries. If the region is not soon visited by copious rain storms there will be great inconvenience and extra heavy cost caused at all the operations.

The Edgar Thompson Steel works will start up next Monday, giving work to several thousand men. Mahoning Valley Iron mills are resuming after long periods of idleness. Coleman & Shields, of Niles, O., have been idle a year; the Girard (O.) rolling mill has been closed for six months; Brown & Bonnells, of Youngstown, O., have been laying off men for a year. All are running in full today.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

Stocks and Bonds.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Wall street review: The railway and miscellaneous share market was strong and higher during the morning session on a belief that the tariff conferees would reach a settlement shortly and report a bill to their respective houses. In addition, the sterling exchange took a downward turn and posted rates were reduced to 487¼ and 489. This was considered as meaning that gold exports would stop for a season and contributed not a little to the strength of the share market. The grain markets had still less influence on stocks and bull traders in the latter were confident that the damage alleged to have been sustained to corn will not be borne out by the government report due to-morrow. The stocks most in demand were the Louisville and Nashville, the Grangers, lead, tobacco and others in which there is known to be a large short interest. The general market left off firm to strong and anywhere from ¼ to 3 per cent higher on the day. Total sales were 186,044 shares. The loading rates indicate that the short interest in the market is still heavy and nearly all the leading issues command a premium.

Loaded with Statistics.

Now, there's a young North Side fellow who used to be a general favorite. But he took to statistics, and he's been a nuisance ever since.

A Sunday evening not long ago found six or eight young people at a Dearborn avenue residence. They couldn't play cards. They didn't feel like singing. So they forgot to light the gas, sat around the grate fire and talked.

A young man who had just returned from a trip around the world told among other things of a clever thief who gained entrance to the treasure chamber of an Indian rajah.

"The thief," said the traveler, "then turned his attention to an immense chest full to the brim with silver coins. He filled a sack until he could just stagger under it, and even then he had to make five trips before the chest was empty. There was just $1,000,000, and"—

"The weight of $1,000,000 in silver coin," broke in a voice from the dusk, "is 58,020.2 pounds avoirdupois."

A young railroad engineer recounted the marvels of the new railroad up Pike's peak.

"This wonderful piece of engineering," he said, "is the highest railroad in the United States. It is"—

"The highest railroad in this country," said the voice, "is the Denver and South Park, a branch of the Union Pacific, at Alpine tunnel, 11,500 feet above the sea level."

The conversation turned to the celebration of birthday anniversaries.

"What a pretty custom it is," said a pretty girl. "And it is so old too. I was reading the other day that it dates back to the times of the early Saxons, I think"—

"In the fortieth chapter of Genesis, twentieth verse," said the voice, "you will find the following: 'And it came to pass the third day, which was Pharaoh's birthday, that he made a feast to all his servants.'"

A young man who is making a name for himself in the electrical world discoursed on his favorite theme.

"I have been experimenting on the incandescent lamp," he said, "and have succeeded in causing one that burned 5,000 hours, and"—

"The longest time on record," broke in the voice, "is 10,036 hours and 13½ minutes."

Then they talked of novels.

"I don't think it's fair," said the hostess, a pronounced blonde, "that all the authors should make their heroines brunettes nowadays. It isn't—"

"Last year," interrupted the voice, "out of 362 heroines 372 were blondes."

Then they talked of going home—and went.—Chicago Tribune.

Advice to Boys.

I am often asked whether I consider a trade or a profession the better for boys to enter upon. The only answer I can make is, it depends upon the boys themselves. If a boy a mere no for mechanics, all right. Let him be a mechanic. If he prefer law, let him study law. Personally, I prefer mechanics. I am very fond of music and literature. On Sundays I teach my class of forty scholars. And I find that I turn from my daily work to books or religious exercises with a feeling of joyous anticipation.

The conditions surrounding boys and manual labor have changed much in eighty years. No boy who is employed by me goes through near so much as I did. I bear the marks on my hand yet that were the result of hard work done when I was a boy learning my trade. In this era of machinery work is far easier. But there appears to be a strong dislike of manual labor among boys of the present generation. Perhaps this is to be attributed to the growth of our large cities and the progress of education.

But, after all, if a boy doesn't have a taste for mechanics, let him look elsewhere for his life work. To boys that are learning trades I would say, Do your best and work your hardest. You will have no brain worry, but you will gain knowledge, skill and physical strength, and you will find the calmer pursuits of life more truly delightful and profitable. To young men and others in business for themselves I would say, Still work on. Don't give way to adversity. When dark times came upon me, I always trusted it was for the best, and patiently worked on and hoped for good times to come again. And they came. Today I am not a millionaire, but I am in comfortable circumstances, and happy.—John Stephenson in Ladies' Home Journal.

A Horrid Keepsake.

There is a certain collector of queer things who owns a skull—another man's skull—and though it is on a shelf with a lot of other dead heads representing cranial types of different races, it diverts attention from them by the fact that its eye sockets are green. The collector says that it is believed to be the skull of a British officer who was killed in one of the battles of the revolution that took place in New Jersey, for it was found in a shallow grave where a number of bodies had been hastily buried. Says the collector:

"The poor fellow was laid out to receive Christian burial, and, as usual, pennies were laid on his eyes to keep the lids down. A cloth was tied over his face to make the eyes close more quickly, but as the battle began to go adversely, or as the dead and wounded began to gather on the hands of the men faster than they could be taken care of, a trench was dug in a hurry and the dead were piled into it. Interments are often made so hastily that dying men are buried with the dead. The moisture from rain and dew rusted the copper pennies, and as the flesh disappeared they sank into the eye sockets where the green rust was taken up by the porous bone, and the skull was indelibly marked as you see it. No, it is not exactly pretty."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Troublesome Similes.

It is said that many years ago the prayers of the First Presbyterian church, Princeton, were asked on behalf of an aged lady who was not expected to recover. The elder who led the devotions earnestly prayed "that she might be restored to health and strength and once more go about like a roaring lion, seeking whom she might devour." The truth of this may not be satisfactorily vouched for, but the Rev. Dr. William Aikman, formerly pastor of the Spring Street church affirms that he once attended a prayer meeting in New Jersey, and one of the brethren called upon prayed that they might all go forth as "calves of the stall" and be made "meat for the kingdom of heaven."—New York Herald.

At the Top.

"Of course there is plenty room at the top," thought the ambitious young man, "and I am going to get there."

So he took the key, and after traveling about half a mile high he got to his room, right under the roof.

If there is any moral to the story at all it teaches us that if a good room is wanted lower down at the popular hotel it had better be engaged before the height of the season.—Philadelphia Times.

He Writes Love Verses.

On the top floor of one of the tallest buildings in upper New York toils an old man who has probably written more poetry than any other single man living. His business is that of writing the "poetic" mottoes which one finds in the cheap candies of the day. Poetry which could never see the light of day in any other way is hidden in these tissue papered "party" candies.

I had an interesting talk with this man a few days ago. He has been twenty years in the business, is over sixty years of age, and has accumulated a fortune, although he still keeps up the same monotonous poetical grind. "It is a curious trade, you think, I suppose," said the old man, "yet some one must do it, and it is very profitable. I have built fourteen city and country houses out of it, and in a year or two I shall lay down the pen for good, and let some one else take up the work. How do I write so much? Why, it has become second nature to me. These 'mottoes' are simple; anything will do, and the more silly they are the better. I know it is perfect trash, and it is preposterous to dignify the things with the word 'poetry.'

"I spend three days of every week here, and read off, I suppose, a hundred of these things every day. Why, I often eat my lunch in one hand and write with the other! Yet as I say, it is profitable, much better than writing bad novels, for after all my verses never do any harm. They are silly, I grant you, but perfectly harmless, and young lads and girls like to be merry over them. Dear me, I suppose I've married many a couple with this pen, and if you'll excuse me I'll just write a score or more before we go out to lunch," and in about fifteen minutes the old man was ready to go with me, carrying in his pocket an envelope full as the result of an hour's work.—Cor. Boston Journal.

Queer Origin of Some Words.

"Oh, dear!" is equivalent to "O dio mio," "O my God."

"Thimble" was originally "thumb bell," the thimble formerly having been worn on the thumb.

"Slave" is not the "slave" of the old etymologists, but, in reality, a person of noble lineage.

"Hatten row," the famous London street, gained its name by being called "la route du roi;" in English, "the king's passage way."

"Dandelion" is dent de leon, "the lion's tooth," and "vinegar" was once vin aigre (sour wine).

"Madame" is "my lady," and "sir" has been extracted from the Latin "senior" through the French.

"Biscuit" keeps alive the Latin phrase, bis coctus, "twice cooked," and a "verdict" is simply a very distant (true saying).

An "earl" was an "elder" in primitive society, while "pope" is the same as "papa," and "czar" and "kaiser" are both cæsars.

A "villain," before the stigma of disgrace was attached to him, was simply a laborer on the "villa" of a Roman country gentleman.

"Hussy" once meant a respectable housewife; a "knave" was simply a boy. "Jimmity" is a reminiscence of the classical adjuration "O gemini," used by the Romans when they called upon the twins Castor and Pollux to help them.

"Lord" is the old Anglo-Saxon "hlaford" (loaf distributor). The Latin term for "Lord" is Dominus, which has given us "dominie," the old term for preacher.—St. Louis Republic.

A Valuable Knife.

An acquaintance of ours once breakfasted in the tavern at Amesbury, Mass. His attention was directed to and riveted on a venerable gentleman at the table opposite, who voraciously shoveled the pieces of cold apple pie into his mouth by means of a knife. The spectacle unmused if it did not horrify the spectator; he could hardly understand how one of so noble a countenance and so distinguished a presence should consume cold apple pie for breakfast, and, more shocking yet, scoop in the monstrous comestible with a vulgar, plebeian knife.

"Tell me," said our friend to the waiter after the venerable scraper had left the room, "who was that old gentleman who shoveled in that atrocious cold pie so industriously?"

"That, sir," answered the waiter proudly, as he drew himself up to his full height, "that, sir, was Mr. Whittier, our famous poet."

"Oh, if that's the case," cried our friend, "it's all right, cold pie or no cold pie. I'm free to say that whatever Mr. Whittier does needs no apology or justification."

Our friend meant it too. As an earnest of his sincerity he captured the very knife with which the famous poet had eaten the cold apple pie, and that knife is now one of the most treasured possessions of the gentleman who gave us this interesting narrative.—Eugene Field in Chicago News.

A Terrible Cause.
