Capitoned Love. An Englishman, who once traveled on foot through Norway, says that he was much attracted by the tameness of the horses and cows which he saw feeding along the roadside.

In my original notes I find a long paragraph overflowing with sentimental tenderness relative to these affectionate cows, that followed and overwhelmed me with their loving licks; but I do not transcribe it, as upon further reflection it is evident that the licking was mere cupboard love.

All cattle in inland, and especially in mountainous districts have a strong craving for salt, and these cows were merely licking the deposits from the sea spray that had fallen on my clothes during the recent voyage.

This discovery was mortifying to my feelings. Man wishes to be loved for himself alone, and the spontaneous manifestations of these pastoral, unsophisticated cows seemed to respond to the heart's fond yearnings. But, alas even the cows of Surrender were liking me for the salt I carried.

Secrecy from the Confessional. A joiner being ordered to execute some repairs in a confessional which stood in the Church of St. Roch, took the opportunity to insert in the woodwork a microphone, which he connected by means of a couple of wires with a telephone receiver placed in one of the way corners of the church, where the man concealed himself when people went to confession.

In this way he overheard a good many secrets, which he turned to account by extorting hush money from the poor penitents. The priest was at first suspected of having betrayed the secrets of the confessional, but after awhile the truth came out and the culprit was apprehended and sent to jail—Journal de l'Electricite.

Fortunate for the Thieves. According to an officer of Scotland Yard, "there are 100,000 pickpockets in London and each one of them knows an American the moment he sees him." This is very fortunate for the pickpocket. He might put his fingers into the American's pocket and never get them back again.—Detroit Free Press.

Fatal Modesty. A tragic instance of the Hindoo female's modesty is reported by the Pehar Times. A house at Pona, a village near Tikari, containing 11 females caught fire. One of the women, a newly married bride, not willing to expose herself to the public gaze, declined to leave the place. The rest resolved to stay with her. The consequence was they were all fearfully scorched before they could be rescued. Seven of them are said to have since died, and the others are lying in a precarious state.

Special to the Scranton Tribune. MONTROSE, Aug. 26.—The mere statement that the Smith family held a reunion at Heart Lake, Susquehanna county, Pa., Friday, does not imply any specific interest, but the fact that over 150 members of a certain branch of that family were present from various localities in New York and Pennsylvania, and that their genealogical tracings date from 1639, adds some importance to the occasion.

A Poland named John Cardish, who was taken to the hospital on Aug. 18, suffering from a fractured skull, died late on Friday evening. Cardish worked in the mines at Duryea, and at the time of his injury his friends told Superintendent Gleason that he had been injured by a fall of rock. Cardish was unconscious when brought to the hospital and remained so until death. Dr. McFadden, attending physician at the hospital, in order to relieve the sufferings of the unfortunate man, decided to perform an operation, hoping that trepanning might prove beneficial. In the operation he was assisted by Dr. Hartman. The physicians found a piece of bone about the size of a cent resting upon the brain. An autopsy on Saturday showed that the wound on the man's skull was not the kind that would be apt to be inflicted by a fall of rock, but looked as though it had been made by some blunt instrument. It was subsequently learned that a fight had occurred in the community in which Cardish had resided at the time his injuries were inflicted. Deputy Coroner Perkins has been notified and will hold an inquest.

How to Acquire a Language.

The common excuse for not knowing tongues is "want of time;" by translating this into "want of will" we reach the true excuse. No man, young or old, is so busy that he cannot find leisure in which to master at least two European languages. For every man, young and old, the day is full of minutes that are literally wasted.

By this is not meant those idle moments spent in senseless gossip, absolutely without meaning and injurious in their effects both to the individual and to society, though even these may be to a certain extent redeemed and utilized. Reference is made mainly to the time passed going to and fro between one's place of business and one's home. Most busy men, engaged in a large city, spend at least an hour a day—some even a couple of hours—in riding backward and forward between the city and their residences in the suburbs. These vacant periods of the day should be filled up. The student ought never to leave his home or office without carrying with him in an iron case either his grammar or his reading book. Such books, provided with vocabularies, may now be had in most foreign languages, and it is not too much to say that, by utilization of spare moments alone, snatched from the busy life of the working day, a good working knowledge of both French and German may be acquired within a year.—Boston Herald.

How Confucius is Regarded in China.

At the present day Confucius yields but little influence over the Chinese. In most cities are temples, or, more correctly speaking, museums, in honor of the sage. They are entirely void of any appearance of idolatry. His name is revered as a wise and good man, but he is not worshipped, nor has he in any legitimate sense been deified by the people. As Washington in America is venerated as the father of his country, and as Abraham Lincoln is spoken of in history as the savior of his country, so likewise is Confucius spoken of among his people as the wise philosopher and patron of letters and promoter of good government, but not as the founder of a religion nor an object to be worshipped. Educated Chinese all profess to be disciples of him and to read his works and to be guided by his instructions. In some respects they perhaps do, but they put their own interpretation upon the import of his teachings. There are no special teachers to expound his works, and every one is free to place such construction upon his teachings as his intelligence or impulses may lead to.

I am convinced that the power of the philosopher over his people has been overestimated by foreigners generally, and that the real nature and scope of his work have been largely misunderstood.—W. G. Denton in Popular Science Monthly.
