William Lydiatt, of Eynon Street, Dies Suddenly in a Lackawanna Avenue Saloon Before Medical Aid Reaches Him-Died of Blood Polsoning.

About 10 o'clock on Saturday evening William Lydiatt, a well known widower, who resides on Eynon street, died in the hotel of George Wuench, on Lackawanna avenue. A short time before his death, Lydiatt entered the place in company with an unknown woman. They sat down at one of the several tables and called for a drink. Mr. Lydiatt had a glass of beer, while his fair companion took whiskey. He seemed omewhat under the influence of liquor when he entered the place. After a short conversation with the woman, he suddenly fell unconscious to the floor. A number of men who were at the bar, placed him upon a table and Drs. Douglass and Beckwith were summoned. A few minutes before the physicians arrived, Lydiatt died.

The cause of death was said to be over-indulgence in liquor. During the excitement which followed the woman, who had accompanied him, disappeared, and has not been seen since. The closing address was made by Mayor Connell, who told of the terrible depression the Wilson bill had brought upon the industries of Scranton, and the distress that now exists among the working classes in the city. He spoke of large numbers of people that will have to be helped by charitable people during the coming winter.

The meetings were largely attended and great enthusiasm was manifested. The citizens of Dunmore, regardless of party affiliations, are alive to the situation and will come forward with an overwhelming vote for protection.
