The labors of the campaign liar are over. There is something pathetic in the spectacle of the worn-out mudthrower whose efforts in this as in other campaigns have recoiled with stunning take and mismanagement.

Rank Has Its Obligations.

It must not be forgotten that victory ultation is brief, while the period of serious duty is long and often exacting. It is a happy characteristic of the Rewilling to work, when real necessity requires. Perhaps the only time when it falled in this respect was just before the memorable elections of 1890, and the swiftness and severity of the popular rebuke yet linger in memory as one of the most painful episodes of recent political history. The teachings of that defeat should be studied and digested. The lessons of that overthrow should be remembered as a potent admonition against the repetition of past mistakes.

ily as it was given, should the recipients of that confidence prove, like the Democrats, unworthy of it. The country, we take it, does not want further experiment. It does not yearn for unsettling and disturbing innovation. There is no general call of Republicanism to arms, either for or against the tariff, either for or against free coinage, either for or against any one of the dozen or more mooted panaceas for conditions which will disappear of themselves, if the people be only let alone. The age of chivalric crusades against imaginary giants has, let us hope, fizzled out in American politics. The people have had enough of chevalier furore and hare-brained, quack medicament. All that they want is to be given a fair and reasonable chance to mind their own business in their own way. Thus favored, they will, never fear, thoroughly work out their own destiny without any need of congressional interference or white house solicitude

There exist, in all parties, men who grasp at the hour of victory to project their own erratic personalties upon the retina of the public eye. Invisible in war, they become invincible in peace, and regard every new political change as'a vindication of their own pet "isms" and fads. One of the chief reasons why the Democracy has been so badly beaten this week is that it could not, when victorious, restrain these torchlight colonels with theories to display. There has existed, at no time since the war, any crisis which would justify the excited rhetoric of a Cleveland or a Wilson. The people prospered, steadfly and generally; labor was contented; capital was confident and our resources as a nation were in healthy and uniform development, when Cleveland, in the zeal of young conversion, blew forth his clarion blasts against monopolies, tariff barons, class cupidity and similar things, and by his very furiousness begat a panic among the herd. The Republican party, if it be wise, will not try to match the braying of opposing theorists with an overmastering antagonistic din. It will not drown partisan clangor and clamor with offsetting noises yet more discordant. It will not, in short, try to break lances on any windmill, under the delusion that the object of its attack is a cruel giant instead of a plain, homely mill; but it will sensibly and cautiously attend strictly to business, letting results speak for themselves.

If improved along that line, the victory of Tuesday will be the beginning of a new and happier era in the government of this nation.

The silent hosts did not do much velling this year, but they voted right.

Religion and Politics.

In this moment of release from the fear of demagogic misconstruction, the time is ripe for a few wholesome truths. It has been the custom of politicians for years to trade upon the prejudices of class, race and creed. In demonstration of this, we do not need to single out any particular locality or any particular party. The fact itself is too palpable for controversy. Politics is a effect upon the liar and his party. The game in which all parties have each campaign liar will henceforth act the its full quota of unprincipled gamescapegoat and bear the burdens of mis- sters, to whom no move is too desnicable that promises temporary gain. We do not, however, propose to abuse the present generation of politicians. They are the victims of a system which exbrings responsibility. The hour of exlong after they shall have died. Neither do we entertain the hope that abuses of centuries may be uprooted in publican party that it has hitherto been an hour. All that we wish for is a calm able to exult without growing vain, and and thoughtful reading of the following propositions:

Politics and religion should not coaesce. Politics refers to the conduct of public temporal affairs. Religion has reference to morals and eternity. The atmosphere of politics is necessarily vitiated. The domain of real religion is surcharged with reverence and awe. No question of conscience can ever be permanently settled by an appeal to the secular ballot. The life of any creed that is fit to live does not depend upon We interpret the magnificent vote of the election or defeat of any candidate Tuesday not as a national license to for public office. If the purpose of life Republican leaders to do, in a legisla- be to prepare for eternity, it will make tive sense, whatever they shall please; no ultimate difference by which sectabut rather as a mark of renewed confidence which will be withdrawn as read-the presence of his Creator. If there be ocratic party is beaten out of its boots. Jackass Democrats in congress, by delayin religion aught that is vital, aught that is true, aught that is sincere, it will not need the aid of political manipulation to bring it home to the hearts and faith of men.

We will go a step further and say that the Protestant who encourages political hatred of the Catholic, or vice versa, for the sole reason that the one s a Protestant and the other a Catholic is an apostate from his religion and an enemy to his country. The noblest Man that ever lived-the Man who in Christianity's eyes was none other than God Himself-commanded His followers to "Love One Another." This did not mean to scourge one another with the poisoned lash of creed prejudice. It was not a behest to bigotry, virulent enmity and proscription. In all the preserved record of Christ's sojourn upon earth there is not one syllable to prove irreligious that He encouraged bitterness and strife among those who failed to think and vote alike. We do not presume to say how these truths are to be applied to particular localities and particular campaigns. But if there be real honor and real manliness left among this generation, there will soon be an increased effort. on the part of reputable Republicans Democrats, Prohibitionists and Populists alike, to discourage the growing effort to sully the work of the Christian churches by bedaubing it, from time to time, with the filth and slime of excited political warfare; and to make partisan capital out of the inevitable prejudices that exist among all sects and creeds.

Horace Greeley defined "flapdoodle" as political food for fools. An occasional indulgence in flapdoodle is not effects of flapdoodle as a steady diet.

Russia's New Czar. Just now the eyes of the whole world are focused upon the new ruler of Russia, Emperor Nicholas II. The interest in the new czar is, no doubt, heightened by the universal opinion that the young man who has had the great responsibilities suddenly thrust upon him does not possess the qualities esmost restless and turbulent of all country, where a condition of affairs exists that is supposed to fill all of the requirements of the nihilist, anarchist or socialist, that the restless, morbid bomb-thrower can never be satisfied. No matter what his conditions may be, he is ever the same brooding, plotting he is ever the same brooding, plotting ers, disputing as to party policy, and malcontent, haunted by the idea that humanity at large may be benefitted by magnanimous. The race of Charles P. O'Malley in the Fourth legislative district stands the future depending solely upon the ability of Democratic authority to win the member that they have enough grief prominently out as one of the most to bear and refrain from personalities brilliant victories in Lackawanna polithat additionally embitter the spirit in ties. Mr. Burke is doubtless by this time convinced that duplicity in politics sometimes doesn't pay.

At last reports our Democratic friends were still inclined to claim Texas; but some of them were far from certain about it.

VIEWS OF THE RESULT.

It Ends the Democracy. New York Advertiser: "The battle is over. The enemy is routed. Republicansm has triumphed. Protection will still protect and Tammany is overthrown. The victory means that the great Amer-can people have been aroused and have shown themselves worthy their glorlor heritage. It means the death, beyond all possibility of resuscitation, of that party that for forty years has never had power without showing an increased capacity or blundering and incompetency. Final-y the victory means that from the lakes o the gulf, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, we should give thanks for the downfall of the Democratic party and all it stands for, and the triumph of protec-tion, law, order, good government and all that makes for the glory of the nation. The Democratic party is indeed dead. And it cannot be born again. 'Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow.'

A Traitor to His Party. Wilkes-Barre News-Dealer: "Grover Cleveland can now remove the mask of silence. His work has been accomplished and the proud satisfaction is his that he did that was possible to aid in his party's defeat. The Democratic party should build for him an enduring monument of brass with the inscription, This man was a traitor to the party that honored him with the highest honors within their Jackass Democrats Accused. Wilkes-Barre News-Dealer: "The Deming the passage of its tariff bill, did the work. The wreck is whole and complete. The poor, sold out hoodooed party that looked up to the big stuffed prophet at Washington as its oracle, is away down n the dregs of the consomme. The people were frightened and misled by Republican buncombe, and although miserably defeated now, the Democratic party is not dead. It sleepeth only, After awhile, like truth crushed to earth, it shall rise again. The good old champion of the poor and oppressed will come back into the sunlight of victory again. The Democratic party has been sandbagged by footpads and dark lantern villains. The clouds are dark above us now. But the sun shines beyond. Be patient and wait, There's a good day coming. Good thing, push it along."

Colonel Singerly Explains. Philadelphia Record: "Pennsylvania is Republican state; but the energy of its Republicanism yesterday was something magnificent. Evidently the voters have carried to the account of Democracy all of the ill fortune that has befalln the country as the culmimation of Republican misrule, and we suspect there may be hidden under the pile of adverse major-ities an A. P. A. remainder. However it all came about, it is an undoubted sweep. He is a poor soldier, however, who complains of the fortune of war, and those only who know how to accept defeat with composure are capable of moderation and justice when victorious. To the undaunt-ed Democrats who stood fast by their colors yesterday too much honor cannot be awarded. They have been defeated, but not dishonored. In the state, outside of Philadelphia, considering the tidal wave of popular dissent which has swept over the stanchest strongholds of De-mocracy, the vote for the Democratic andidates is surprisingly large."

Gives Hope for the Future. Philadelphia Press: "And so the delu-sion of 1890 is dissipated, and the unspeakable folly of 1852 is repented and repudi-ated. Two years ago the people lost their reason. Flaring and flagrant demagog-ism prevailed. Cant, humbug, hypocrisy and craze dominated the hour. The fruits of that unutterable blunder have been eaten in a sorrow and distress unfamilparticularly injurious, but there are lar to this great American nation. In frightful examples about us of the evil their rude and painful awakening the peo ple have recovered their reason, and the uprising with which they have spurned and condemned Democratic imbecility and Democratic assaults upon the indus trial and commercial welfare of the country is one of the most imposing political demonstrations in all history. It is a misfortune that the people could not entirely rectify their mistake of two years ago. They must wait until 1896 to complete the work. But their powerful and unmis-takable mandate of yesterday will do much. It will halt the further course of this ruinous free trade agitation. The Meaning of the Slump. Philadelphia Times: "The Democratic party was not in line of battle yesterady in any of the debatable states of the Union. It was discordant and rent by factional feuds, dissatisfied with its lead ers work together or to inspire party fol-lowing. The singular spectacle was pre-sented of a Democratic president withown city and state, thus proclaiming to the country that either the president has mented. The most fearful lesson that the last session taught the nation, and one that more impressed the people than all its many specific blunders, is the enforced considerate judgment of the nation that Democrats do not possess the statesmanship required to govern this great Republic. There is today ten-fold more faith in the tariff reform and financial policy of the national administra-tion than there is in the leaders of the Democratic party, and until the party shall develop leadership it must expect defeat. Yesterday gave it an overwhelming slump because the occasion called for a revolution; but there will be Demoeratic slumps or Democratic victories in
