The nauseating stench that emanates from the cells in the borough jail, and with which prisoners and those whose business compels them to visit the jail are so seriously annoyed, is at last arousing public interest. While there are many places throughout the borough where the germs of loathsome disease lurk, it is extremely doubtful if a more contaminated spot exists at the present time than the lockup.

At a recent meeting of the Cooper Hall wing of the Water Street Baptist church, the following resolutions were adopted by the ex-parte council: "First, while we cannot commend the entire course of the expelled members, yet we recognize them as Baptist brethren and cannot evade the convention that an inexcusable rashness has characterized the action of the pastor and members of the First Baptist church of Pittston in the wholesale exclusion of members; second, that the members of the Cooper Hall wing of the Water Street Baptist church, who have been expelled, be readmitted to the church; third, that we counsel our expelled brethren to seek restoration to the church, and to continue their quasi-organization until they are received back fourth, that if, after all reasonable and prayerful effort, a reconciliation shall prove impossible, the expelled brethren should seek further council. Signed, W. H. Mentzer, moderator; George Hine, clerk."

"While there is so much talk about candidates for the next majority of the new city of Pittston, it should be understood that Burgess Maloney, who was elected last spring for three years, has the call for the office, if he wants it."--Gazette. True enough, neighbor, but it is asserted on excellent authority that Mr. Maloney has expressed himself as being adverse to being a candidate.

This vicinity is again the victim of a gang of sneak thieves. Wednesday night no less than three places were visited on the West Side. The victims were: Hitchner & Co.'s office, "Squire James Ehret's office, and Jenkins & Co.'s store. From the latter it would appear they first visited Hitchner's office. They found a tag hanging on the door of the safe, on which was the inscription: "Don't blow open, it is unlocked; try it." The burglars, it appears, made use of the knowledge, as the safe door was found open. The safe is only used for the repository of the books, so the thieves, not finding anything of value, next proceeded to Jenkins' store. After effecting an entrance by means of a window and ransacking the drawers, they attacked the safe in the office. With the aid of heavy hammers, they took the lock and knob and shattered, thereby allowing the doors to be opened. Eleven dollars and eighty-three cents, all the money in the safe, was taken, together with a silver watch and a box of cigars. The thieves next visited "Squire Ehret's office, but finding nothing of value, departed and are yet among the missing.
