AFTER THOUGHTS.

From the Philadelphia Times.

The pocket conference system has become common throughout the state, and it simply enables a cunning politician in any county to get control of the conference for congress or for senator, and open a trading post at which conferees are offered for sale for cash or political produce.

Another vicious system that now prevails very largely throughout the state is that of rotation among counties in awarding nominations. The rule is equitable when not done at a fearful cost to the party by the nomination of incompetent candidates, or when it overthrows tried and trusted leaders and brings the mousing owl into the nest of the eagle.

Instead of having candidates who can carry the party to victory, the party is compelled to carry its candidates, and is often overladen by their want of character or fitness and thus plunged into defeat.

No man should be nominated for congress in any district by any party who cannot poll at least his full party vote, and the aim of every party should be to nominate a man who is stronger than his party, and can bring more than an ordinary party vote.
