The abduction of little Goldie Worden--or Hibbard, as her proper name is--created considerable excitement on the street Thursday noon. Just as the smaller scholars were emerging from the high school building at the noon hour, a closed carriage, containing a man and woman, drove up. Jumping out, the man accosted Goldie, who is only 8 years old, and after a few words, picked her up, threw her into the wagon and drove off. They were followed by Constable R. M. Platt and overtaken at Foster. The man proved to be the father of the girl, Ed. Hibbard. Her mother died when she was a baby, and as the father was a dissolute man, she gave the child to its grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Ferris. Hibbard now lives in Binghamton, and has repeatedly tried to entice the child away. Last year the grandfather had an order from court granting him the custody of the child, and Hibbard signed a paper relinquishing claim to it. He and the woman were brought back here, and after a hearing before Squire Eastman, both were ordered under bonds for appearance at court in sum of $200. As this goes to press, a writ of habeas corpus is issued and testimony being heard to recover custody of the child for the grandparents.
