of a trip to South Gibson last week, a lively little town in the interior. The chief subject of discussion is the project of a new electric road from Nicholson to Susquehanna, via the Tunkhannock creek, touching about half a dozen small towns on the trip. The scheme is well worthy some enterprising capiteries. The chief source of amusement at this interior village was fishing through the ice, which is daily indulged in as long as the ice and fish hold out. It with a broken leg and it had to be Large numbers of fine specimens were 'hooked," after which the older residents retire to the hotel and swap yarns about the fish they caught when they were young. It seems strange how the stories grow with age. One old veteran had caught in that same pond thirteen suckers that just filled a washtub, while another individual related how, about thirty winters ago, he had cut a hole in the ice about two feet cross and hooked some of the finest pickerel he had ever looked upon. The old man said he didn't know just how much the largest weighed, but to give be truthfully stated that we have us a little idea he stated that he pulled never shown a better assortment one almost through the hole in the ice when his hook broke and he would have
