Mystery Of the Caribbean

By this time we were close on to the reef. The ship had struck at high tide, and lay with one-half her hull across it. Nothing more convenient for our purpose could have been arranged. We lay in still water under the lea of the reef, the top of which was now bare; and all we had to do was to clamber out on it, get a line from over the ship's side, and go aboard.

"Way enough!" called out the "stern all! Look out, forward there! Now, then, we'll have a word with this chap. Ship ahoy!" The hail was stentorian; it might have been heard back at our point of embarkation; but it produced not a whisper of response from the vessel. The situation did not strike me as being entirely agreeable. It was picturesque and impressive, but not invit-There were the loneliness of the quiet, moonlit sea, the limpid beauty of

He repeated his hall twice; and then, turning to me, with the deadly calm of one who has passed beyond the point where demonstrations of any sort can adequately express his emotions, he said, in the softest tones I had ever heard "I think I'll just step aboard and make a few inquiries. Well, not if I know myself! I came out here to see these fellows, and you can bet your life, Colonel Enderby, I am not going ashore again without

"Ah! then have the kindness to follow me," said he, in the same unnaturally sliky voice. He stepped out on the surface of the reef, and I followed him. It was only a few inches above the water, and was both rough and slippery. We trod on limpets and seaurchins, and slimy strips of seaweed. Something that looked to me like the

"Dry?" I repeated with a peculiar shudder. "Dry?-what do you mean?" mean," returned the colonel. "He's skin and bone; he might have been dead a thousand years. And to judge from the clothes he has on," he added, throwing the light over the costume of the corpse, "he ought not to have been alive for the last two hundred years, expression of a savage snarl. Such was the body; the dress was like none I had ever seen before, unless in ome stage extravaganza, or represented in ancient pictures. It consisted mainly of a jerkin and short breeches of some rough material, and a thick pair of boots coming up to the knee. The cut and fashion of these garments showed at a glance that they had not been made in our day, nor for many generations before; they might have een the fashion in an age when Charles Second sat on the throne of Spain, and Louis Quartoze and William of Orange on those of France and England. How, then, came they to clothe the body of a man lying on the deck of a vessel in this year 1894? The colonel and I did not ask each other this question; we were not in the other this question; we were not in the humor for speech. We continued our investigations and found the deck strewn with corpses, all more or less resembling the one I have described. They lay in all postures and places as benefit they could expect from doing if stricken down suddenly where they us any harm. Here they were, hard stood by some comprehensive thunderand fast on the reef, at the mercy not bolt. There were cutmost urgent longing at that moment lasses, dirks, pikes and many grodid not take the form of a craving to tesque and clumsy pistols and matchclamber up the ship's side and find out locks, whose detonations no living ear could have heard for centuries. Here and sthere, in points of vantage, we found seven or eight quaint old bronze cannon, some of them richly carved and embossed.

The waint of the ship was low; the decks forward and aft were raised above the middle space to the height of a man and were reached by steep flights of steps. On the poop we discovered, leaning against the mizzen mast, the only figure on board which had kept its feet. It was the corpse of a tall man, with wide shoulders and a certain stateliness of bearing, in spite of the untoward circumstances. He wore a wide-brimmed black felt hat, ornamented with a superb great plume of scarlet feathers. His dress was rich and decorated with barbaric magnificence. His erectness was only an accident; he had been propped up in his position by his long, basket-hilted rapler, the point of which was stuck in the deck, while the hilt was caught be neath the rim of the gold-inlaid corselet

HERVOUS DISEASES OF YOUNG MEN

I give the following statement unasked. I have been a sufferer for so long a time and have spent so much money with so-called specialists and each time have been disappointed and misled, that it was with a good deal of doubt that I called on DR. HACKER. But knowing of some of the cures he made in this city four years ago, and the confidence of the people of Scranton in him then, I resolved to try him. It was a lucky move for me. I was troubled with dizziness, spots floating before my cyes, bad dreams, melancholy, easily startled when spoken to, no desire to exert myself and tired on the loast exertion, especially in the morning; had no pleasure in company; very nervous and altogether was a complete wreck. But thanks to DR. HACKER, I am today a well man. I would advise all young men suffering as I did to call immediately; in 45 days I gained in flesh is pounds. For obvious reasons I prefer to withhold my name, but if any who suffer will call on DR. HACKER at the Lackawanna Medical Institute, he will furnish my name and address.

Mr. C. W. Campbell—Dear Sir: I have given my boy, Freddie, 7 years old, some of Dr. Campbell's Magic Worm Sugar and Tea. and to my surprise this afternoon about 2 o'clock he passed a tapeworm measuring about 35 feet in length, head and all. I have it in a bottle and any person wishing to see it can do so by calling at my store. I had tried numerous other remedies recommended for taking tapeworms, but all failed. In my estimation Dr. Campbell's is the greatest worm remedy in existence.

Yours very respectfully,
